U S Ambassador Scali Calls for "Extraordinary Measures" to Save Capitalism

July 20 (IPS) — Ambassador John Scali, United States Representative to the United Nations and U.S. Representative to the Fifty-Seventh Session of the UN's Economic and Social Council meeting in Geneva, issued a release July 5 to the press with the text of his address to the Session. The release was designed to cover for the control of food production worldwide, now being implemented by the Rockefeller faction of finance capital.

Scali Ignores Sabotage of Production

Scali declares that the real danger to the world is not war, but food shortages. He then paints a picture of how the U.S. is making every effort to supply the world with food: "U.S. fertilizer plants are operating near capacity to meet the extraordinary demand created by greatly increased food production in the U.S. and abroad." Didn't anybody tell Scali that last month the Rockefeller-controlled W.R. Grace Co. — with the complicity of the Moroccan government — instituted a 50 per cent price increase on phosphate, a necessary ingredient for fertilizer production?

Does Scali just pretend not to know that nitrogenous plants are being held at 60 per cent capacity in the U.S. because of the controlled allocations of natural gas? Nitrogen is necessary for fertilizer production. Millions of people are now starving to death because of this conscious collapse of fertilizer production.

While lamenting the "crisis in food production" facing the world now and in the future, Scali opines: "World food production depends on the wind and the rain." Actually, food production can be increased vastly now through capital goods investments and through the development of technology which will increase the land available for food production. A crash program in fusion power could provide the technology to feed the whole world by the end of this decade! But Rockefeller and colleagues are wilfully sabotaging the development of fusion power—thus ensuring perpetual energy crisis hoaxes. The great Oil Hoax, for example, concentrated dollars which are going to "national" development, labor-intensive projects to pay the debt service to Rockefeller banks.

Doubletalk

Scali apparently can't decide whether people are starving or eating. He says: "Most nations have not yet, however, experienced serious decreases in real production, or in standards of living." He then reveals that a crisis exists "which threatens 25 million people with starvation." Lest capitalists misinterpret this and panic, Scali hastens to add: "There is, in other words, no world depression...[however] There will be no increase in the living standards of most of the developing nations in this decade."

Scali is worse than confused: No less than nine paragraphs in the press release aim at convincing the world that the problem of world food production can be solved merely by "emergency aid" (rather than capital intensive investment). "Emergency aid" without rapidly advancing technology is a euphemism for Robert McNamara's World Bank plan for labor-intensive forced work in the underdeveloped sector.

To consolidate the administrative technicalities of control of food allocation, he proposes replenishing the "International Development Association." The Rockefeller faction's control of international credit will determine which nations are worthy of development funds for "national" food production.

To forestall international organization against manipulation of food production and planned food shortages, Scali suggests reorganizing the UN away from a global consciousness: "Streamlining the structure and revising the priorities of the United Nations will at best have a marginal effect on global development. The key decisions will be national ones." To assure Rockefeller's fingertip control of the UN apparatus as the world depression deepens, Scali acts as publicist for the "need for radical surgery" of UN agencies. Radical fascist economic measures are absolutely on Rockefeller's order of the day; or, as Scali more diplomatically puts it: "Extraordinary measures to restore financial order are needed in our interdependent world."
