Newark: Anatomy of a Race Riot

Grid of an Anglo-American SS Exercise in Population Control

NEWARK, Sept. 14 (IPS) — The National Caucus of Labor Committees Security and Intelligence units have established that the three days of sporadic violence that “erupted” in the Puerto Rican ghetto of this city’s North Ward last week were planned months in advance and staged under the direct supervision of Rockefeller’s Anglo-American SS. An international network of intelligence agencies, major corporations, psychiatric institutes, and news services were tied into this brutal experiment in psychological warfare.

No law enforcement official, politician, or journalist can read this report without shedding the illusion that the spate of riots predicted for this fall by Rockefeller newspapers like the CIA’s New York Times are “spontaneous,” not the direct consequence of Rockefeller marching orders.

The Structure of Control

Through clinical work done at major social science laboratories (i.e., the Institute of Social Research at the University of Michigan, the Tavistock Institute in England) and tested on a large scale in cities throughout North America, the CIA/LEAA has developed a paradigm for conducting planned race riots. Before developing the particular case of Newark, so there are no blocks in identifying these bastards wherever they turn up, a brief profile of the agent-types deployed in these operations is appropriate.

Begin with the fact that the CIA/LEAA, by the nature of its work, is forced to recruit from a category of people who by definition have given up their humanity in favor of the “security” of having Mother CIA (or some surrogate mother agency) protect them. Begin with that common, fatal character flaw — and the different categories of agents is straightforward to distinguish. (In fact, the critical question becomes merely whether the act of surrender was a conscious decision or the result of some form of behavior modification/brainwashing.)

The poverty pimp/community organizer type is the latter-day judenraten (“Jewish Councils” — the Jews in the Warsaw ghetto who, out of fear for their own lives, took responsibility for keeping their comrades in lines, patrolling the slave-labor camps, following Nazi orders). These judenraten serve the Rockefeller family under the pathetic delusion that they “serve the community.” In every city in the U.S. — in every ethnic enclave — a now deeply entrenched network of such scum plays a key role as first approximations of a self-policing apparatus: pushing drugs through methadone and detoxification centers; pushing racist beliefs from poverty agencies, community groups, and local churches; keeping a stranglehold on any potential or emerging revolutionary leadership within their districts.

Do not be fooled by their rhetoric or apparent sincerity of feeling. These racist hustlers who fill a critical function as provocateurs and spokesmen around whom the most psychotic and demoralized elements of any group can be consolidated, at least momentarily.

Given that these poverty pimps crumble into the most insecure, cringing infants when isolated or exposed, the LEAA has created another network of clinically brain-washed “zombies,” mass-produced in drug clinics, behavior-modification programs and hospitals (veterans hospitals are especially useful, given the military training common to all their patients.) In most cases consolidated into tight groups (street gangs, so-called “radical” organizations, all underground “terrorist” groups, all black and other nationalist groups), these faceless, mindless former human beings are completely dominated by control agents (in some cases the poverty pimps already described). Brainwashed by some variation on the community-control racist belief structure at the core of all bourgeois neuroses, they can be deployed as scabs, thugs, terrorists. They will perform these assignments in states of semi-stupor (if they have undergone a heavy program of behavior modification) or outright psychotic hysteria (if they have been subjected to attack therapy programming).

In every city of significant size or importance, the Rockefeller forces have deployed at least one — usually more than one — cabal field officer who self-consciously identifies with the Anglo-American SS and its political objectives. Look for him or her in some appointed position in government or industry; a background in the military or politics; or tenure at some well-known university. These slick operatives generally stay in the background, invariably winding up in key decision-making positions whenever a crisis is precipitated.

The field officer can be easily detected. Just beneath the surface of a cultivated persona is an infantile ego, enthralled by its own self-importance, secretly longing to reveal its true identity, yet caught in the schizophrenic trap of having to keep it to itself. Scratch the surface of his ego, question his macho identity — and the persona begins to crack.

A new type of police officer had to be created, more in line with the low-intensity psychological control at the center of Rockefeller's Anglo-American SS game-plan. The new cop — trained as a "Community Relations" officer through a program of sensitivity sessions and courses in behavioral sciences — is himself brainwashed. Beneath the blue blazer is a psychotic killer, ready to move with precision against the community (particularly communist organizers) he has been programmed to hate.

On top of the new police bureaucracy are a core of individuals who, like the field operatives, know whence their orders come. Trained at a consortium of universities set up by the LEAA, they are the administrators of the new National Gestapo, deploying their forces on the basis of the political criteria laid down by the cabal.

In every city in the U.S. this core of agent-types makes up a hierarchy astride an environment they are trained to control. With access to funds and to the whole network of Rockefeller-controlled media, these agents at the top effectively are in a position to play out any number of variations on a controlled situation, each of which leads to the result of racial conflagration.

Vietnamization

Newark was targeted in the mid-1960s as the testing ground in the advanced capitalist sector for the methods of political warfare employed against the peasant populations of Southeast Asia. Those methods of low-intensity counterinsurgency were pioneered by British military intelligence officers like Brigadier General Frank Kitson.

While serving in Kenya in the 1950s during the Mau Mau uprising, Kitson played a key role in crushing the rebels by recruiting natives loyal to the government into a rival gang of counterinsurgent "insurgents." While masquerading as revolutionaries, Kitson's countergang played on those very ideological flaws (customs, superstitions) that kept the population enslaved.

Kitson's Gangs and Countergangs was the handbook for the CIA's creation of Imamu Baraka's Temple of Kawaida in Newark following the 1967 riots.

Kitson's field experiments — which the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency tested in Vietnam before "bringing the war back home" to Newark — were the practical application of the psychological-warfare theories of Dr. John Rawlings Rees. Rees was a founder of the criminal Tavistock Institute in England (set up in the 1920s with Rockefeller Foundation funds), which has devoted 50 years of psychological research to perfecting techniques of mass brainwashing. The Institute of Social Research, Kurt Lewin's National Training Laboratories, the Alinsky Institute — all are the offspring of Tavistock.

As head of the Psychiatric Division of the British army during World War II, Rees led the team of psychiatrists that interrogated Nazi leader Rudolph Hess. Rees' own fascist ideology was so overt that Hess later wrote: "John Rees was the only man I met in England who really understood me."

As President of the World Institute of Mental Health (also set up with monies from Rockefeller foundations) Rees developed on every continent a network of psychologists, psychiatrists, and doctors doing in-depth studies of local ideologies and customs for use by the CIA and the rest of the American SS in formulating precise psychological warfare. It was directly through Rees' efforts that the "Seven-Headed Cobra" brainwashed belief structure of Kawaida Ministers Karenga [an exposed police agent and hired killer who assassinated West Coast members of the Black Panther Party] and Baraka (as well as the late Symbionese Liberation Army) was developed. The CIA's use of Rees' techniques of exploiting neuroses, especially racism, to set up self-policing mechanisms was applied directly to Newark.

To exacerbate and institutionalize the neurotic divisions between Newark's black and white workers, the CIA sent in an agent for several weeks in the spring of 1968. Ironically, the agent, who during his stay had the power to command the local police as well as Baraka and Imperiale, used the cover name "John Rees."

By the time "John Rees" left Newark in 1968, the brainwashing of Leroi Jones Baraka was complete, and the countergang dynamic between the black nationalist Kawaida group and Anthony Imperiale's white vigilantes was in motion. A proposal was submitted to government officials in Washington calling for the funding of community "peace" patrols fully equipped with weapons, patrol cars, and communication systems. Although "Rees' " proposal was not immediately acted upon, within two years eight cities around the country, including Newark, were being funded to set up their own community gestapo networks under the so-called Hi-Impact Anti-Crime Program within the newly-created Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

Rocky's Big-House Slave

In order to maintain tight control over Operation Newark after "Rees' " departure, Prudential Life Insurance Company instructed special Vice-President [in charge of counterinsurgency] Donald S. McNaughton to establish the Newark Urban Coalition (UC) as a clearing house and funding conduit for CIA activities in the city. In May 1968 McNaughton appointed Gustav Heningburg to head up the UC.

Heningburg's major qualification for the job was that he had served in the U.S. Army's Counterintelligence Corps in Newark functioning as a special agent and Assistant Operations Officer. He is black, which gives him access to the entire political terrain, and unquestionably loyal to master Rockefeller. Heningburg is now a member of the Commission on Critical Choices, Rockefeller's world government think-tank — a position he earned by overseeing a reign of terror that has virtually paralyzed the city's population.

Just as the major industrialists of Weimar Germany financed the consolidation of a fascist infrastructure around Hitler, funds were readily available for Newark's double-edged fascist front (Imperiale and Baraka). As a starter fund Prudential handed over $75,000 to Baraka. That seed money, along with the massive funds that were to follow from the OEO, HUD, the LEAA, from the Rockefeller, Ford and other foundations, was intended for the filling out of the fascist infrastructure. But first, certain preconditions had to be established.

Between 1968 and 1970 brute force methods were used to crush the deeply entrenched Democratic machine of then-Mayor Hugh Addonizio. The Newark Teachers Union was next. From above, Heningburg's Urban Coalition provided the barrage of propaganda to cover the hooligan activities of Baraka's "simbas" — lumpenized ghetto youth recruited into John Rees' Kawaida belief structure. At the same time, the counterforce of Imperiale's race-mongering neatly turned every significant question of working-class survival into a black/white pseudo-issue.

With one foot in the door, by 1970 the Anglo-American SS began to pour funds into Newark, building the actual machinery of an alternative fascist governing structure.

The NIMH (National Institute of Mental Health) financed a Multi-Phasic Drug Program that centralized control over a potential scab-labor force of thousands of addicts, either chemically "hooked" on methadone or psychologically broken by aversive therapy (as developed at Tavistock). Baraka stooge Donald Tucker was placed in charge of this operation.

Through his World Institute of Mental Health Rees had created an international network of psychiatric troubleshooters, trained in population control. His ambition was to set up outposts in every community in order to sustain the completely controlled environment. Out of the New Jersey College of Medicine and Dentistry, community mental health centers were set up in every ghetto in Newark, providing drugs and other forms of "therapy," funneling people into the drug rehabilitation maze, maintaining a psychological profile of every neighborhood, engaging in actual brainwashing.

In 1968 the Federal Law enforcement Assistance Administration was established with funding conduits in every state. Through the LEAA a national gestapo was to be created as a replacement for the highly inefficient city-county-state system of police departments. Operating on another principle developed by Kitson and fellow British Intelligence office Robert Thompson, the first line of defense against crime and subversion was to be the community itself, organized into blockwatchers, vigilantes, and paramilitary groups. Directly above that, a highly trained mobile counterinsurgency police force well versed in Reesian psychology was to be provided with the most developed "low-intensity" weapons systems.

Through the LEAA a pilot Hi-Impact Anti-Crime Program provided Newark with $9 million to create a police network that would reach into every pore of the city.

At every housing project, salaried Tenants Patrols were provided with uniforms and weapons. Baraka's NewArk School was funded to give residential training for blockwatchers; training which consisted in brainwashing indoctrination in the Seven-Headed belief structure of community control.

At the other end, the oldtimers within the Police Department itself were being squeezed out and replaced by a new generation of college-trained counterinsurgents — community relations experts who would self-consciously carry out the building of a single, Anglo-American worldwide police machine. And for a small elite Tactical Squad, the most sophisticated forms of riot training and equipment were provided.

Riot Plans

By the beginning of the summer, 1974, a core group of Rockefeller field hands had been installed in key positions in Newark's political structure, so effectively that a series of contingency plans for riots in the city at the end of the summer could be prepared with an almost 100 per cent probability of success.

July 6 Hubert Williams, the head of the city's Hi-Impact Program, was appointed by Mayor Kenneth Gibson as the new Police Director. A graduate of the Harvard School of Criminal Justice, a key training ground for junior officers in the Anglo-American SS, Williams was well suited to the job of creating what he described in his acceptance speech as a "quasi-military" organization. Within a week of his swearing-in, Williams had brought Newark into the LEAA's $2.9 million computerized communication system, instituted special police "decoy and disguise" squads, and set the Hi-Impact blockwatcher program on a fully operational footing, pending the arrival of funds from Trenton.

The last vestiges of potential old-guard resistance to overt counterinsurgency low-intensity operations were purged from positions of power within the police bureaucracy. Rocco Paradiso, a close ally of Imperiale, was transferred out of his position as head of the Special Squad Division in the Detective Bureau. He was replaced by Roland Michael, whose training in police-community relations, sociology, and psychology at four universities speaks for itself.

August 24 Reverend Alphonso Roman, a candidate last fall on Baraka's Unity Movement slate, was appointed as head of the New Jersey Puerto Rican Congress, an umbrella agency for Puerto Rican community groups throughout the state, tied directly into the LEAA through the Rutgers Labor Relations Institute.

Another Baraka supporter in the Puerto Rican ghetto, Ramon Rivera, had been showered with federal funds to set up OYE, a Spanish-language daycare program. Rivera's political baptism was documented by the Labor Committees a year ago in the pamphlet Papa Doc Baraka — Fascism in Newark. In 1968 Rivera was a gutter scum heading up a gang of lumpenized Puerto Rican youth. At that time he was paid off by Heningburg and Baraka to terrorize the United Community Corporation directors into resigning. The OYE project was part of his reward for services rendered.

Maintaining a safe distance from the "revolutionary" Baraka, Heningburg developed the core of his own network of "respectable" operatives among the city's Latin population. In doing so he created yet another layer of Kitson-style countergangs, which give the false impression of representing the divided interests of the older, more settled Latins (groups like FOCUS, rooted in the city's Democratic Party and the soon-to-be-formed Hispanic Emergency Council) as against the younger, more militant elements (the Baraka-Revolutionary Union-Puerto Rican Socialist Party-Anti-Police Repression Coalition).

An employee of the Urban Coalition named Zambrano was primed by Heningburg to emerge as key negotiator during the "riot."

Final Alterations

The following section lays out the details of how the riot plan was activated. Only one significant alteration in the scenario had to be accomplished. During the early weeks of the summer the black nationalist zombie operation of Papa Doc Baraka had been undergoing a face lifting.

At the May 25 African Liberation Day Conference (ALDC) in Atlanta, Georgia, a faction fight had been staged — one of the CIA's favorite devices for redeploying badly tarnished counterinsurgents — which resulted in half of the ALDC member groups burning their dashikis and taking up the banner of "Marxism-Leninism-Mao Thought."

This alteration in belief structure enabled Baraka's brainwashed zombies to be integrated into a broader countergang including the predominantly white, nominally Marxist Revolutionary Union without causing major short-circuiting of the Prudential Life Insurance Company computer.

The Revolutionary Union (RU), itself a product of the Tavistock mill, was set up in 1968 in order to channel the most alienated elements within the counterculture student movement into a number of police-controlled operations (RUers selected out for their extreme fetishism of violence were sent into the Symbionese Liberation Army. Petrified of workers, overtly racist, the average RU recruit is programmed to become a raving psychotic macho through the use of Maoist phrases (an actual belief structure based on complete submission to "the people") in Reesian attack group sessions. That machismo is the necessary cover for fear of the very groups he is programmed to support — third world liberation movements and workers' struggles.

Activating

In order to create the minimum popular motion necessary to spark a riot, a psychological climate of tension and frustration in the city was required. In Boston, Baltimore, and a number of other places around the country, the LEAA had been priming a crisis around the busing-school desegregation issue due to explode with the opening of school in the fall. No such busing issue existed in Newark.

At the beginning of the summer, the Gibson administration planted a time bomb. The Neighborhood Youth Corp Program, which hires high school-aged youth for summer employment, over-extended its hiring quota. As a result, August 12 the administrators announced that due to an accounting error, 11,000 employees would be immediately fired — three weeks before the program was to end. In a city in which unemployment among youth in the labor market runs higher than 50 per cent, the move was guaranteed to generate a massive outcry.

A series of protests and demonstrations began — the CAP (Congress of African Peoples)-RU-PSP immediately moved in. Employing a tactic that the RU zombies used during the recent strike of Baltimore sanitation workers, the countergangs led a crowd of 200 hysterical high school youth on a garbage-dumping spree in the Newark City Council Chambers August 20. Fifty-six arrests ensued. Under confined circumstances, most of the ingredients necessary to provoke a full-blown riot had been tested out, and the Neighborhood Youth Corp swindle was still an open wound which the CIA prepared to turn into a running sore.

The First Provocation

The annual Labor Day Puerto Rican festival, held in Branchbrook Park in the North Ward [see map] was targeted by the CIA-LEAA as the kickoff point for the actual riot. Despite his performance at City Hall, Baraka was still too much of a liability (following Labor Committee exposure of his CIA connections) to permit an overt racial flare-up to be ignited in the black Central Ward. The city's Puerto Rican population, largely concentrated in a ghetto area bordering both the white North Ward and the Central Ward, was a prime alternate target.

The morning of the picnic, the city police and the Baraka-RU-PSP countergang were deployed. The former began petty harassment in the Puerto Rican ghetto. The latter distributed a leaflet throughout the city reminding people of the recent Youth Corp swindle. But it was up to the Essex County Park Police to set the riot in motion.

Sept. 1, 1500 hours - At 1500 hours Sept. 1, with no provocation from the crowd of 6,000-10,000 that had gathered in the park, the County Police moved in to break up a crap game, their horses trampling picnickers in the process. (Anyone with the vaguest idea of the quality of cultural life in Newark can appreciate the absurdity of using a crap game in the park as a kickoff point for a gambling cleanup campaign.) The aura of tension had been created hours earlier when Park Police had distributed a leaflet demanding that the "dirty Puerto Ricans" keep the park clean.

Within an hour of the initial outburst of fighting between police and picnickers, Mayor Gibson set up a command post at a nearby restaurant, soliciting the aid of Senator Imperiale. Imperiale's presence was calculated to provoke the crowd further. He and Gibson set in motion the countergang dynamic that was used at every ebb-point during the riot to create false conflict and thus rekindle the fires. At every critical point a new element was added — but the essential dynamic, creating a controlled environment in which every alternative course of action would play into the CIA's hands, remained the same throughout.

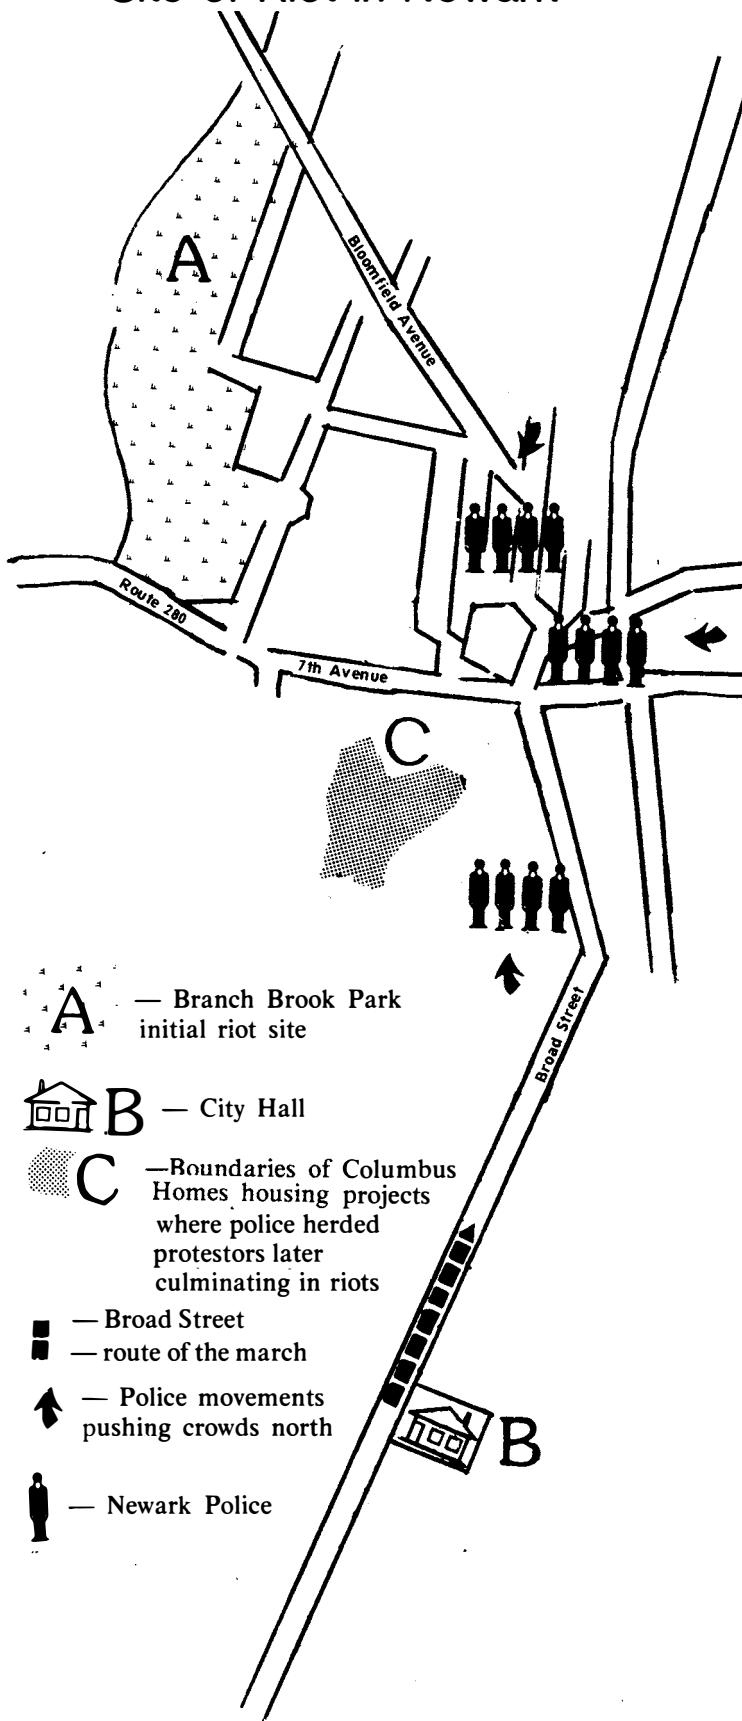

Sept. 1, 2100 hours In the first ebb, although three police cars had been set on fire earlier in the day, by 2100 hours the crowd had dwindled to a few hundred engaged in a standoff with the police, who were in a phalanx formation three deep armed with shotguns on Park Avenue. At that juncture the crowd could have been convinced readily to disperse. Instead Gibson and Imperiale stepped in. Imperiale insisted that the Mayor call in more cops to bust the crowd up. Gibson responded: "No, we must negotiate." Calling for community leaders to step forward, Gibson led the remaining crowd on a march through downtown to City Hall. The effect was to reconsolidate the rapidly dissolving crowd into a tightly knit body, and to regroup that body in the middle of the city.

Countergangs on Call

Wind of the disturbances reached the next layer of countergangs — the Revolutionary Union and Congress of African Peoples (CAP). Not coincidentally they had been agitating since the beginning of summer against "police brutality." They immediately deployed their forces downtown to infiltrate the crowd, initiating their now-famous tactic of throwing garbage.

Sept. 1, 2300 hours The CAP-RU intervention was ineffective until another element was introduced. By 2300 hours Sept. 1 the crowd tension began to subside for the second time. This time tension was reactivated when Gibson and Santurino Romero of FOCUS (Gibson's community representative in the initial negotiations) emerged from City Hall and told the crowd that no progress could be made that night and that everyone should go home until the next day. Police moved in to disperse the crowd, all but 150 people went home. Those who remained began to march north on Broad Street, carrying red flags provided by the Maoist countergangs. Ten to twelve police cars prominently displaying shotguns pushed the crowd north. At this juncture the police were prepared fully to activate the riot plans. All major roads leading into the city were sealed off. However, the crowd mood was not yet at the appropriate level. Minor scuffling broke out when they reached Washington Park at the edge of the downtown area. Thirty police cars dispatched to the scene managed to diffuse the crowd thoroughly. Although there were reports of minor trashing in the Puerto Rican area during the next three hours, nothing of riot proportions had been provoked ... yet.

The CIA-LEAA found itself in a bind at this point. The entire night had passed without serious incident. The next 24 hours would be critical. If a self-generating riot was not underway by the end of Sept. 2 there would be no riot in Newark in the immediate period.

Major Mobilization

Sept. 2, 1200 hours At this point a major mobilization plan was activated in which every tired counterinsurgent in Newark was called upon to pull together his constituency. At 1200 hours Sept. 2 the Puerto Rican Socialist Party emerged clearly as the CIA-LEAA's latest acquisition in the city, with a soundtruck provoking Puerto Ricans to "wake up and fight back." Shortly before the scheduled City Hall meeting the PSP joined Baraka and RU in a demonstration and leaflet calling for a march to City Hall from the "Spirit House," Baraka's Central Ward headquarters. By then, the CIA clearly had decided to open up the Central Ward, an area that had been unaffected by events of the preceding day, but had been the center of riot activity in 1967. The leaflet capitalized on the population's fear of the blatant police provocation and called community control of the LEAA and more self-policing.

Sept. 2, 1500 hours By 1500 hours Sept. 2 the crowd outside City Hall had swelled to nearly a thousand. The CAP-RU-PSP marchers had begun minor trashing. Observers reported that undercover police (probably from the new LEAA-funded "decoy and disguise" squad) were sprinkled throughout the crowd. But again, the catalyzing development came from City Hall.

In the negotiations themselves, the CIA was activating yet another layer of the countergang network. All the participants in the negotiations were familiar with another. At other times they had all worked together in overthrowing the Addonizio machine during the CIA's initial push into the city. This time, however, the forces were to be divided. When Alphonso Roman and Ramon Rivera brought Baraka into the negotiations, Zambrano walked out of the meeting under orders from Gustav Heningburg. Playing on the petit bourgeois fears of middle-aged Puerto Ricans, Zambrano set up the Hispanic Emergency Council the same day. This functioned as a counter-negotiating body to the "rabble" represented by Baraka et al. Such planned diversions guaranteed that no satisfactory agreements or progress could come out of that day's meeting.

Ramon Rivera, the highly unstable rabblouser described by one close contact to be prone to violent outbursts of infantile rage when provoked, was dispatched to inform the crowd outside City Hall that for the second day negotiations had broken down. He told them that Gibson's behavior was an insult to everyone present. His final advice was calculated to catalyze every feeling of frustration and rage into a sense of profound impotence and a corollary desperate macho outburst. He said: "Go home and come back again tomorrow."

Up until that, there had been little sign of uniformed police in or around the area of the demonstration, despite some trashing. The Tactical (TAC) Squad had been mobilized around the corner in the Board of Education building, which also houses its central headquarters. On sidestreets to the east and west of Broad Street, large numbers of police cars staffed by officers in riot gear were waiting

As soon as the frustrated demonstrators moved in on the politicians leaving the meeting, the TAC squad came out through City Hall armed with shotguns. Once again the crowd was forced north on Broad Street. Police cars emerged from the sidestreets and formed a moving wall which forced the crowd (now trashing and looting) toward the North Ward and the location designated for the actual "riot."

Sept. 2, 1630 hours One hour later (1630 hours), as the crowd reached the intersection of Broad Street and Bloomfield Avenue, a police ambush hit them on the front and on the right flank, forcing them to disperse in the general direction of the Columbus Homes Housing Project (see map).

The second major tactical objective in the Rockefeller riot plan had been realized. The demonstrators had been provoked to the point of actual rioting. But that in itself was not the key. The critical factor was forcing the crowd into its own neighborhood — and in particular, into the housing projects, where the disease of ghetto ideology is most destructive. Despite the fact that the Labor Committees had successfully prevented any community control operations (including the Hi-Impact Tenant Patrols) from establishing an organizational stronghold in the Columbus Homes, years of planning, massive amounts of funds to drug programs, community mental health clinics, police organizing, and brainwashing of street gangs took their toll.

The dispersal of the crowd into Columbus Homes was the beginning of a minor battle between police and rioters which continued through most of the night. Six stores in the area were set on fire, rioters pelted police with heavy rocks, bottles, and so forth. The police responded by occupying positions in the courtyards and on the roofs of the projects. From that vantage point they fired into apartments. Residents reported to the Labor Committees that they spent the night on the floor dodging police bullets.

With the exception of the Labor Committees, the residents of the area, and the police, no one is aware that by early morning Sept. 3, the riot had ended. This fact has been concealed at precisely that moment the next element in the Rockefeller arsenal was mobilized: a nexus of news services and rumor networks which created a smokescreen of false and exaggerated reports aimed at fanning dying flames in Newark and, more significantly, fanning the flames the CIA-LEAA was igniting in Boston, Baltimore and other cities.

CIA Press Agents

Sept. 3, 100 hours At 1000 hours Sept. 3, WCBS began the press barrage by reporting that whites were being pulled out of their cars and beaten in the area of Columbus Homes. The Star Ledger, the only daily newspaper in Newark, gave major coverage to a press conference held by Anthony Imperiale in which he declared that all firebombers should be shot. Rockefeller's primary mouthpiece, the New York Times, gave front-page coverage to the rioting and editorially called the events of Newark just the beginning of a new wave of explosions destined to hit every major city in the country.

In an interview given extensive radio coverage, "Reverend" Alphonso Roman announced that the newly formed Peoples Coalition Against Repression and Police Brutality had received no satisfaction from Gibson. Leaders of this countergang were listed as Roman, Ramon Rivera, Baraka, and Sigfredo Carrion of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party.

Sept. 3, 2000 hours By 2000 hours, rumor networks had been activated in every part of the city. Earlier in the day, Heningburg had set up the Hispanic Emergency Council as the countergang to the Roman group. Its first action had been to set up a rumor hot-line operating out of the YMCA. The word passing through the North Ward via police radios (which are well monitored by residents there) was that gangs of youth armed with guns were coming into the city from New York. Despite this effort to incitement, only sporadic looting and gunfire were reported in the Columbus Homes area throughout the night of Sept. 3.

Sept. 4 Sept. 4 another element of psychological warfare was introduced simultaneous with the acceleration of stories emanating out of the rumor networks. For the first time, food stamps were withheld from the mail at a number of welfare centers in Newark, including the center servicing the residents of Columbus Homes. In the counterinsurgency manual Low Intensity Operations, Frank Kitson had discussed at length the withholding of food as a key element in any program of population control. This tactic was applied in Newark as a means of heating up a situation that had obviously ebbed.

Sept. 4, 1600 hours During the early afternoon rumors of another major intervention into the City Council meeting proved false. At 1600 hours the Labor Committees received a report that police in the area of Columbus Homes had been telling local residents that Mayor Gibson had given the orders to shoot to kill. It was at such a point in the 1967 riots — after the “spontaneous” eruption had ended — that the police terror riot began which resulted in more than 20 deaths and hundreds of injuries.

Sept. 4, 1900 hours By 1900 hours organizers in Labor Committee briefing networks indicated that people in Columbus Homes were not falling for this most recent police provocation, but that fears over a possible police riot were creating a tense atmosphere. The LEAA then began a direct provocation. Police were ordered to seal Columbus Homes — using several cars with shotguns in plain view. Another force moved into the project itself, driving residents off sidewalks and out of playgrounds into the buildings. The operation was carried out with military precision with no forewarning or justification.

Forty-five minutes later, the police just as suddenly withdrew to their positions on Seventh Avenue. Labor Committee reconnaissance teams reported groups of police, with their riot helmets off, laughing and joking with a group of Latin youth down the street from Columbus Homes.

As these maneuvers were being conducted, in an adjacent section of the North Ward false reports over the police radio claimed that gangs of Latin youth were mobilizing. Throughout the night false reports sent police cars screaming through the entire city. No further incidents were confirmed.

With the failure of the Sept. 4 seal operation to touch off new violence, the Rockefeller forces decided to consolidate their gains through national press scares without abandoning the option of reactivating riot contingencies in Newark itself.

Countergangs on Stage

The withholding of food stamps built up an undercurrent of new frustration that was not immediately tapped. Sept. 6, U.S. Labor Party-Labor Committee organizers encountered an angry crowd of 200 outside a food stamp center near Columbus Homes. Most individuals in the crowd were enraged, but clearly not ready to riot. None of the Rockefeller agents responsible for activating the three-day outburst were deployed to the scene to provoke the crowd.

Sept. 7 Countergangs were deployed in other parts of the city. Both Baraka-RU-PSP and the Progressive Labor Party (PLP) countergang issued leaflets calling for separate demonstrations Saturday, Sept. 7, in the downtown area. Praising the “fighting spirit” of the Puerto Rican community, flailing out at police brutality — both leaflets were openly provocative. An unconfirmed rumor that the Hispanic Emergency Committee was building for the PLP rally made the rounds.

On Saturday only one rally took place. The Baraka group cancelled theirs for lack of a permit. A pathetic crew of 10-12 PLPers surrounded by a massive police barricade lectured each other for an hour. WCBS gave the rally nationwide coverage and reported falsely that Mayor Gibson had been a speaker. This press move was designed to clarify to Baraka’s group its expendable position if it stepped out of line rather than to provide further provocation.

Epilogue

At this writing, further demonstrations are being set up in Newark, keeping open the possibility of further rioting there. In Boston the school desegregation issue has already resulted in several skirmishes between demonstrators and the police.

The Progressive Labor Party is being deployed again in the Boston plan. The same network of poverty pimps, LEAA operatives and zombie countergangs exposed as the conspiracy which incited three days of race war in Newark is being used there. In every other city in the country, the same Rockefeller network stands poised to carry out whatever marching orders come down from the cabal hierarchy. There is no escaping the fact that these are dangerous criminals — potential mass murderers every one. To stand idly by as they attack the continental working class is criminal conspiracy.

After reading this report no excuse remains for ignorance. Law enforcement officials have clear identification of criminals to arrest. Journalists must launch an immediate public investigation into the controlled race wars being activated across North America by Rockefeller’s Anglo-American SS. Silence on this issue cannot be maintained by anyone who retains a shred of moral integrity.
