

WORLD SLAVE LABOR STALLS

Dec. 18 (IPS)--Despite elaborate plans for a huge fall thrust, the Rockefeller family's worldwide slave labor development scheme is now on the rocks.

Not one hole is being dug for shale or tar-sands oil extraction, two cornerstones of Rockefeller's energy development plans for North America. In interviews this week, high-level flunkies at the Chase Manhattan Bank and William Simon's office at the U.S. Treasury admitted to IPS that they have no idea whatsoever how to get lagging "Project Independence" off the ground.

Even in the Mideast, an IPS survey has shown, despite blueprints for shipping almost the whole of the steel and chemical industries to the Persian Gulf and other hellholes, actual construction has been blocked by the confusion of the Rockefeller Mideast strategy.

For the moment, the only area of the globe's surface where the construction of Rockefeller's new Auschwitz camps is underway remains Latin America--Peru, Brazil, and Mexico. And considering the liabilities of their unmasked Mexican stooge, Luis Echeverria, Rockefeller's jumpy planners already are having some very persuasive second thoughts.

A Breakdown in the Gameplan

Behind this stalemate of the Rockefellers' "Second Marshall Plan" is a general erosion of the Rockefeller strategy for fascism with a democratic face.

In the United States, a Chase energy expert told IPS, workers' opposition to energy austerity and relocation has kept the bulldozers off Western coal seams and the Athabasca tar pits for the time being.

Meanwhile, Arab press reports show that despite several billions of dollars worth of "firm contracts" for massive development efforts in Egypt, unemployment is still high and very little earth has been turned. Certain critical project-areas in Iran, the fulcrum of the Rockefeller Mideast strategy, are blocked by the cabal's uncertainty about their own plans for war with Iraq, on puppet Iran's western borders.

In Canada, Shell Oil, Syncrude, and Home Oil have pulled their stakes out of the Hudson Institute's great tar-sands project in Athabasca. With Canada's own energy policy in the middle of a brawl between provincial governments, Canadian energy minister Donald MacDonald has promised a "definitive statement" within three weeks.

But the U.S. Treasury is not so fortunate. In an interview this week with IPS, Treasury undersecretary Gerald Parsky suffered a schizophrenic collapse over the government's "energy policy." First, the nervous Parsky claimed that the $11 per barrel oil price was too high, and then said that the price for oil and natural gas should be deregulated so that companies could make profits through higher prices! He added that the slave-labor energy projects are still going through--although the government would not bankroll them.

This epidemic of muddle-headedness among Rockefeller mouth-pieces is a product of the cabal's mothballed strategy for war in the Mideast. Without a war to raise oil prices by about 30 per cent--according to the estimate of the Hudson Institute--the wasteful energy pyramids are not "profitable," even by capitalist standards.

As long as CIA planners keep scratching their heads about their Mideast muddle, the entire "development" gameplan will continue to crumble at the edges.

Cartels in Danger?

Another side effect of Rockefeller's Mideast turnabout is to jam up the planned raw materials producers cartels in copper, iron ore, bauxite, and other key industrial commodities. As IPS reported, last week's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries failed to come up with a plan for "indexation" of oil against other commodities, as the Shah of Iran had earlier demanded.

"Indexation"--centrally controlling the prices of various development-project outputs to ensure "profitability"--is the key to sustaining a high level of capital investment along the demands of the Fourth Reich.

Rather than rise through a series of OPEC-like hoaxes, industrial metal prices have plummeted during the past week, with copper at a two-year low on the international metals markets.

In danger are such development schemes as a $4 billion copper-mining project in Peru, and similar slave-pits in Mexico. If Rockefeller cannot manipulate the copper price, he cannot guarantee the profits on new copper mines during a period of industrial collapse.

PCI BEEFS UP CIA'S MIDEAST FRACAS

Dec. 18 (IPS)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI), presently under the hegemony of CIA infiltrator and Politburo member Giorgio Amendola, is becoming increasingly open in its collaboration with
