

As Faction Fight Rages

Ford Wins Mandate To Dump Rocky

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 29 (NSIPS) — President Ford's upset victories May 25 in the Tennessee and Kentucky Republican primaries and his comfortable win in the Oregon GOP contest last week dramatically extended the President's Michigan mandate to dump Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, dismantle Vice-President Nelson Rockefeller's National Security Council-directed nuclear terror apparatus, and embark on a program of economic development for peace.

In the aftermath of those victories, the President has failed to act on his mandate, choosing instead to conduct a muffled behind-the-scenes factional battle within his own Cabinet. In a dangerous political cat-and-mouse game, Ford and his associates are selectively leaking the widening Cabinet rift to prestigious Wall Street house organs, while pretending that the President is in control of his "team."

Although Ford's recent electoral victories keep him alive politically, his equivocation on the world's leading terrorists, Rockefeller, Kissinger, and Attorney General Edward Levi, enhance the likelihood of a Presidential assassination timed to coincide with an NSC-announced wave of nuclear terrorism around the July 4th Bicentennial commemorations.

In the face of such equivocation, Rockefeller moved to demolish any institutional points of resistance to his assassination-terror plan and Schachtian economic policies, throwing a blond bombshell against the U.S. Congress, a strident Daniel Moynihan against the United Nations, and turning loose a gaggle of Democratic Party slave labor herders and union busters to round up young adults for work camps and Teamster union leaders for jail.

The U.S. Labor Party's mass mobilization against the Rockefeller multi-level political terror network this week intersected the backroom guerrilla warfare between Ford and Rockefeller forces, throwing the spotlight on the isolated and insurrectionary Vice President and forcing the muted factional battle out into the open.

Muffled Battle...

The President's "boldest" action this week came on Tuesday when he snubbed Rockefeller's latest bid to retain influence over the White House by ordering 119 New York State delegates to declare for Ford. Amidst Rockefeller-leaked rumors that he aspired to a Cabinet post or the VP spot in the next Administration as a reward, Ford coyly commented, "I don't expect to repay anybody for delegates that come to the Ford campaign." Besides, he added, "I always believe what people tell me," referring to Rockefeller's statement last year that he would not be a Ford running-mate. But at the same time, Ford publicly reiterated his intention to retain the services of Kissinger. On Thursday, an increasingly desperate Rockefeller praised Ford's pledge to keep Kissinger and tried again to insinuate himself into the President's good graces by intimating that 180 uncommitted New England-Northeast delegates would not doubt go for Ford.

Rockefeller, attempting to maintain this facade in an appearance on CBS' Face the Nation, told credulous interviewers that he helped swing the votes to President Ford because he was "interested in the good of the nation." Projecting a first ballot victory for Ford in which remaining uncommitted delegates would put the President over the top, Rockefeller stated that the President's policies were "simply wonderful. He has given us prosperity and he has achieved peace in the world... These are horrendous accomplishments," he added in a revealing Freudian slip.

Behind this amiable public facade, intense factional warfare raged unchecked in the highest echelons of government, including the Departments of State and Justice. Only the murky outlines of the battle are being leaked to the press by Ford insiders. The New York Times confirmed that the fight in the Administration is over control of the NSC in a May 24 column, which reported that White House staff director Richard Cheney and his associates "have not been able to impose discipline on the activities and policies of the NSC staff, which is... in the view of most of those in the White House, still controlled by Secretary of State Kissinger." In his press conference May 27, Rockefeller verified the substance of factional dispute and his own insurrection by commenting that the Times article was an "accurate reflection" of what is transpiring in the Administration.

The times also observed that brawls have broken out in the State Department over Kissinger and his policies, an assessment echoed the same day by the Wall Street Journal which concluded that Kissinger is an inveterate liar who has antagonized everybody, a "political liability who may yet cost Gerald Ford the Presidency."

Left unstated, but understood by witting political observers, is that the content of the battle is over how to respond to the U.S. Labor Party's offensive against the Rockefeller-Kissinger-NSC terror apparatus.

The May 26 Baltimore Sun and New York Post speculate that Ford is quietly distancing himself from Kissinger, preparatory to dismissing him altogether. James Wechsler in the New York Post commented, "Kissinger's decline is almost certainly irreversible... He can derive little solace from the President's latest testimonial to him; baseball managers know that a 'vote of confidence' from the front office is often confirmation that their days are numbered." The Sun editorialized on the advisability of sending Kissinger on a long trip, "Any place (for Kissinger) is acceptable to the Ford political team as long as it is far, far away."

Rockefeller himself responded to the attacks on his Secretary of State. "Henry Kissinger is the best Secretary of State that this country has ever had," the Vice President said today on Face the Nation. "The attacks on him are unfounded. . . . After all, he has represented our policy admirably all over the world." Rockefeller did not elaborate on what he meant by "our policy."

Informed sources in Washington, D.C. are also pointing to Attorney General Edward Levi as the next target for a Presidential sacking. They report that Ford met with his Attorney General May 22 to "rein Levi in." The May 24 Chicago Sun Times subsequently reported that Levi's answer to whether he would be in the next Ford Administration was, "I haven't any idea. I'd be very interested to find out the answer to that question myself."

Out in the Open

The U.S. Labor Party's exposure this week of political terrorism networks coordinated by the Institute for Policy Studies under the direction of the National Security Council is already precipitating full scale factional strife within the U.S. criminal justice system under the nominal direction of Attorney General Levi. A Secret Service official in San Francisco, briefed on the Institute's plans for a July 4th nuclear Pearl Harbor, volunteered that law enforcement agencies including the FBI are torn by a rift between old-line forces, who are concerned with the competent investigation of actual crime, and the "young Turks" or "progressives" — those forces directly involved in fomenting and covering up terrorism and political assassinations for Rockefeller. Already many law enforcement officials have expressed a willingness to investigate the whole NSC-Institute terror apparatus.

Repercussions are being felt at the top of the Justice Department. There, three officials — Levi, Assistant Attorney General Richard Thornburgh and Acting Assistant Attorney General Robert Keuch — are nervously trying to keep the lid on the federal investigation and thereby protect their own criminal activities. Yesterday, Levi was personally forced to openly intervene to squelch any investigation, when he ordered Justice Department Director of Public Relations Bob Havel to inform the Labor Party national headquarters that the Attorney General had personally issued an order blocking any investigation of the Institute for Policy Studies and nuclear terrorism. Havel said "I was told that there are not close enough connections between the Institute and the Weathermen to warrant an investigation under the new guidelines." Earlier in the day, a high FBI official in the Midwest revealed that Levi had issued an emergency order to the FBI not to conduct any investigation of the Institute for Policy Studies and nuclear terrorism "until after a crime has been committed."

Today's Washington Post reports that Justice Department spokesman Robert Feldkamp announced yesterday that the FBI is investigating the so-called July 4th Coalition of 130 radical organizations that are planning a mass demonstration in Philadelphia on July 4th. Feldkamp said the investigation began after Levi wrote FBI director Clarence Kelley May 25 requesting a 30-day "preliminary inquiry" to determine if there is factual basis for allegations against the July 4th Coalition. According to the Post, Feldkamp "declined to specify what those allegations are, what prompted the probe or what investigative tools are being used." FBI spokesman John Harting reported meanwhile that a "civil disorder type inquiry" had been ordered this week by the Investigative Review Unit of the Justice Department.

While the Justice Department began to unravel at the seams, the Labor Party's explosive exposé of the Institute for Policy Studies' terrorism connections was sparking a furor in Congress. Conservative Republicans in particular were requesting a comprehensive picture of the Institute's activities. This prompted Rep. Larry McDonald (D-Ga), a Congressman in Rockefeller's right-wing networks around the John Birch Society, to publish a report on the Institute with biographical sketches of its Fellows, which significantly omitted their interlocking relationships with the National Security Council. The Senate Internal Security Committee requested a full briefing on Rockefeller's nuclear terrorism operation, while staffers from the House Science and Technology Committee confirmed that nuclear terrorism by so-called "radical groups" was not credible without government collusion. Similarly, an individual with "top NSC" clearance told the Labor Party in Washington that he had "checked out your information (On the NSC-Institute terrorist plot) and everything you are saying is true. I'm not going anywhere near Philly on July 4."

Rocky Cornered. . .

The May 25 primary results not only gave Ford the critical leverage to move against Rockefeller; the six state vote also was a clear rejection by the working class and conservative Republican mid west and far west industrial layers of the Democratic Party's Nazi corporatist program. This rejection had first been voiced in last week's Michigan primary. Both GOP contenders Ford and Ronald Reagan have denounced the Democrats' economic centerpiece, the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act, as a kind of fascism; meanwhile, none of the Democratic candidates espousing the fascist program have been successful in mobilizing working-class support for their candidacies.

In the most recent Democratic contests, former Georgia peanut Governor Jimmy Carter, police-state intelligence czar Sen. Frank Church (D-Id), and self-proclaimed "neo fascist" California Governor Jerry Brown swapped states in what amounted to a peas and carrots selection process. Carter carried Tennessee, Kentucky, and Arkansas—his Southern base of support in the Democratic machine-apparat; Church took his home state of Idaho and adjacent Oregon; and Brown "swept" the cactuses and gambling casinos of Nevada.

There is no mandate to be had for fascism from the U.S. population. Desperate Democratic pundits are now appealing to the waterlogged Sir Lancelot of the party, Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass), to pull them out of the drink by selling their corporatist package to credulous star gazers.

Reflecting the underlying political realities, the Indianapolis Star, part of a Southwest and Midwest newspaper chain based in Phoenix, Arizona, published May 26 a lead editorial entitled "Humphrey-Hawkins: Nazism?" Citing U.S. Labor Party authority, the Star commented that although Senator Humphrey (D-Minn) says he is not for concentration camps, he is for concentrating economic power at the top, like Nazi Finance Minister Hjalmar Schacht. Senator John Tower (R-Tex) meanwhile equated the bill with an "economic police state."

... And Dangerous

With nothing left in his political arsenal but terror and destruction, Rockefeller wielded both this week.

A zombified "Congressional aide," Elizabeth Ray, wreaked havoc in the U.S. Congress all week, after the Washington Post splashed across its front pages May 23 the details of her illicit relationship with Rep. Wayne Hays (D-Ohio), chairman of the House Administration Committee. Within hours after the story broke, Levi ordered the FBI to Capitol Hill to undertake an unprecedented investigation of Congressional staffing practices. Within 24 hours a grand jury was convened to take testimony in the Hays case, prompting the beleaguered Representative to charge that the Washington Post, FBI and Assistant Attorney General Richard Thornburgh were engaged in a conspiracy "to get me." Hays' colleagues meanwhile fell all over each other in the rush to disclaim any connection with Hays or his mistress.

Reliable sources here today disclosed another side of the Hays operation. A stable of high-priced prostitutes has been conduited into Capitol Hill for the purposes of profiling U.S. politicians for political blackmail and related dirty tricks. This operation is carried out under the overall direction of the NATO-linked Atlantic Council and under the more localized supervision of Rockefeller flunkey Sen. Jake Javits (who is said to "know all the girls"). The prostitutes, who are part of an international prostitution ring with connections to the NATO headquarters city of Brussels, were originally deployed into the New York City administration of then Mayor John Lindsay in the late 1960s. They were sent into Washington during the latter stages of the Lindsay administration through various "political favors."

The sources report the connection to the Hays affair as the following. Hays, who heads the U.S. delegation to NATO's Atlantic Assembly and is regarded as a bullethead by NATO sources, is known to "hate" Rockefeller's paper-clip General Alexander Haig, the NATO Supreme Commander. Hays, our source said, therefore had to go. If Hays is forced out, the person in line to head the U.S. delegation to the Atlantic Assembly is Jake Javits.

The ensuing pandemonium not only obscured to legislators' view the bitter faction fight raging in the administration, but served as a convenient cover for a major Rockefeller-inspired and Democratic-authored drive to make Hjalmar Schacht's economic mistakes the law of the land. Senators William Proxmire (D-Wisc) and Humphrey joined forces with the Brookings Institution to remove the "inflationary" features of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, eliminating minimum wage provisions and instituting wage controls. Almost unnoticed, the House passed the Young Adult Conservation Corps Act, sponsored by Rep. Lloyd Meeds (D-Wash), to put 1.5 million youth to work, reminiscent of the Nazi Arbeitsdienst digging ditches and tree-felling. Meeds' office attributed his quick success to the fact that the bill's features were probably the "best kept secret in Washington." A Meeds spokesman added that the employment would be "labor intensive." "These kids," he said, "will be doing things you'd ordinarily use heavy equipment for — bulldozers, cranes — they'll be using picks and shovels." Meeds, together with other House colleagues including Harrington (D-Mass), Chisholm, (D-NY), and Tsongas (D-Mass) are now working on an overall mandatory Universal Youth Service Act.

Senators Robert Griffin (D-Mich) and Henry Jackson (D-Wash) simultaneously quietly announced their intention to dismantle the powerful Teamsters union — preparatory to ripping up the Teamster' recent contract settlement. Within hours of a May 28 Washington Post exposé, airing charges by the Professional Drivers Council (PROD), an NSC counter-gang of Teamster "dissidents" contracted by Ralph Nader, that the union's leadership was guilty of corruption and mismanagement, Griffin issued a press release pledging "a full investigation." Since November, Griffin has been investigating alleged pension fund frauds by the Teamster leadership, while Jackson looked into the connections between organized crime and the union. Now both lawmakers are suggesting that Rockefeller confidante Senator Jacob Javits (R-NY) would be the best man to finish the job, by heading up an overall wrecking operation against the union.

Another Rockefeller workman, the Wyatt Earp of the United Nations before being unceremoniously dumped as UN Ambassador by Ford last year, Daniel Moynihan, turned his guns on that international body in an interview to be aired by CBS tomorrow, and accused UN diplomats of accepting bribes to influence their votes.

The broadsides being fired by Rockefeller forces at every political institution in sight represent a "pre-war deployment" — the explicit preparations for the replacement of these institutions by police state following an NSC terrorist-induced national emergency. The intensity of the destabilizing attacks indicates that Rockefeller's target date is not far off — a fact confirmed by several sources this week.

The week has therefore ended with President Ford in an extremely advantageous though dangerous position. If the President and the forces immediately around him move to dismantle the NSC-Institute for Policy Studies networks he will at once remove the threat of nuclear terrorism, the danger of his own political assassination, and the principal organizing force for the fascist slave labor programs. All three operations are under the direct control of the NSC-Institute networks. All that the President need do to insure that the slave labor legislation never becomes law is to renounce any form of slave labor "make-work" programs and to reiterate his stated commitment to increase employment through the creation of productive jobs in industry.

The President's continued failure to take such necessary steps will continue to leave his life and the lives of his fellow Americans in peril at the hand of the crazed Rockefeller.
