

As the New York Times approvingly pointed out in a front page article July 15, the only labor leaders who showed up at the Convention were Leonard Woodcock, the Trilateral Commission member who heads the United Autoworker Union, Jerry Wurf of AFSCME, Arnold Miller, the Institute-installed head of the Mineworkers, and a strong contingent from the National Education Association. In other words, the Convention, pulled in the staunch members of the Institute-controlled "social democratic" agent wing of the labor movement. The "old guard" of American labor, including George Meany, was shut out of the proceedings, according to the Institute's stated plan of destroying the current leadership of the AFL-CIO and transforming that organization into a Nazi Labor Front governed by the "social democrats."

The only significant bloc representing the traditional Democratic Party were the George Wallace contingent — which offered no organized resistance because of Wallace's capitulation to the Institute — the Chicago machine of Mayor Richard Daley, was so happy to be accepted back into the fold that it acted like a cowed and beaten trained seal throughout the proceedings.

The only significant blocs representing the traditional Democratic Party were the George Wallace contingent — which offered no organized resistance because of Wallace's capitulation to the Institute — and the Chicago machine of Mayor Richard Daley — which was so happy to be accepted back into the fold after the Institute had barred it from the 1972 convention that it acted like a cowed and beaten trained seal throughout the proceedings.

To keep things under control, the Institute crew mounted a sophisticated multi-pronged containment operation. A Ford Foundation-funded psychological profiling questionnaire was conducted daily of all the delegates and fed into the computer each night. Its purpose was to pinpoint delegates requiring further persuasion and to develop a post-convention hit list of delegates and other party activists who would not cooperate with the "Born Again" party. Along with the profiling, a massive arm-twisting campaign was carried out within delegations, most notably with the New Jersey delegation, containing members who refused to accept the pre-selected nominee and program. Guest passes were freely distributed to Carter supporters and withheld from his opponents, to ensure to the TV audience a proper show of mass "support" for the candidate. To subdue the spread of Labor Party influence among the delegates and press, the Institute ground out a perpetual slander mill, including the distribution of the new Counterspy "Terrorist Information Project" pamphlet calling on all "progressives" to unite to destroy the U.S. Labor Party.

IPS Prepares Shock Troops

On the morning after the convention adjourned, the Democratic National Committee met to map out the synthetic machine they hope to pull together over the coming months. Committee spokesman told the assembled state chairmen that beginning Aug. 5, the party's national headquarters would initiate "training schools" and "intensive consultation" sessions for shaping up recalcitrant party organizers in the appropriate organizing methods for Clockwork Orange candidate Carter and the party's fascist platform. The "training program" is modeled on one initiated by Carter himself in 1974. Not surprisingly, the Committee promised to concentrate much of their "training program" in the South and Illinois — two areas of the party's greatest weakness.

At the same time, the Committee announced plans to launch a vast voter-registration drive to register 35 million new voters. Both this drive and the campaign "training program" have a dual purpose. Covering for the intended mammoth vote-fraud against the Labor Party and selling the unpalatable Carter and his fascist programs to American workers by any means possible.

Democrats Pledge Allegiance To Platform Of War And Fascism

On Tuesday, July 13, the Democratic National Convention rubber stamped a Rockefeller-dictated Party Platform of slave labor and fascist restructuring of the economy coupled with an international program of confrontation, genocide and war. The Democrats are also pledged to faithfully follow the Atlanticist-NATO scenario for international "counter-terror" gestapo tactics against the Third World. True to his terrorist Institute for Policy Studies controllers, Carter told the Convention: "Peace is not the mere absence of war. Peace is action to stamp out international terrorism."

To ensure the quick passage of the platform — drafted at closed-door meetings several weeks ago by David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, staffers of the Brookings Institution and the terrorist Institute for Policy Studies, the agent controllers of the remains of the party explicitly prevented all dissenting discussion on the platform: for four days, Democratic Party leaders dutifully trotted to the microphones to pledge unquestioning allegiance to the platform, while national TV viewers caught glimpses of the heavy-handed gag procedures in use.

Yet as blatant as the stated policy declarations of the platform and party leaders were, they were a toned down version of the cabal's community-based fascist structures detailed in a platform signed and circulated at the convention by the Institute for Policy Studies itself. The I.P.S. document is an unconcealed exposition of Hitler's "Volksgemeinschaft," as proposed to the convention by keynote speaker Rep. Barbara Jordan.

Fascist Restructuring of the Economy

Stressing the imposition of corporatist economic structures, the platform declares that "without the creation of a new bureaucracy, but rather through the well-defined use of existing bodies and techniques" the Democrats will implement "national economic planning" — the code phrase for "fascism with a human face" as outlined by Carter backers Leonard Woodcock and Robert Roosa in 1975. The Federal Reserve system would be tightly integrated openly with the labor and the production policies dictated by the Wall Street bankers. "A domestic development bank" would be established to coordinate money flows to designated industries.

The government regulatory apparatus would be overhauled into a small assault unit against the industrial sector. The platform demands "a re-examination, reform, and consolidation of the existing regulatory structure." The Democrats outline an assault against corporate executives who would resist this onslaught and detail how they plan to eliminate "unnecessary" industrial sectors. A process of "selection of an Attorney General free of political obligation and committed to rigorous antitrust prosecution" will be implemented to perform hatchet jobs on executives and business alike, while an "independent consumer agency with sufficient muscle to protect the public in regulatory matters" will ensure that key industrial sectors conform to the Rockefeller economic blueprints.

The platform calls for a mass pool of slave labor, including millions of women thrown off welfare and workers kicked off the unemployment rolls, to funnel into the reorganized industrial hellholes. It seeks the creation of massive public service jobs programs, and outlines the consolidation of existing youth work projects. The Democrats further pledge to impose a strong "domestic council on wage and price stability" to slash workers wages.

In an open declaration that the I.P.S. cabal intends to channel welfare recipients and workers collecting unemployment insurance into slave labor jobs, the platform states that public service jobs are preferable both to welfare and unemployment insurance. "Those persons who are physically able to work should be required to accept appropriate available jobs or job training" or be thrown off the welfare rolls, the platform demands.

These pools of workers are to be herded into energy development projects, scratching out coal and other 19th century energy sources, if Rockefeller has his way. The platform demands major development of coal reserves and the conversion to coal use of industrial users of oil, along with a large-scale federal initiative to develop alternate energy supplies. The platform's insistence on severe cutbacks of energy consumption and their specific attack on "nuclear power," — and by implication fusion power, which could fuel massive increases in industrial output, pledges the Democratic Party to the decimation of U.S. industry and the deaths of millions of people worldwide.

Recognizing that American workers will not permit themselves to be passively herded into the slave labor public camps, the platform declares "that control of crime is an urgent national priority" and calls for swift conviction and punishment of offenders, "including corporate lawbreakers." "An independent special prosecutor" would be established to target particular resisters.

Foreign Policy: Platform of War Confrontation with Soviets

To complement fascist economic policy that — if not stopped — will lead to war with the Soviet Union by 1977, the Democrats demand a full scale mobilization of the military.

The size and structure of our military forces must be carefully related to the demands of our foreign policies in this new era. These should be based on a careful assessment of what will be needed in the long-run to deter our potential adversaries: to fight successfully, conventional wars... and to reassure our allies and friends... To this end, our strategic nuclear forces must provide a strong and credible deterrent to nuclear attack and blackmail. Our conventional forces must be strong enough to deter aggression... The hallmarks of the Nixon-Ford Administration defense policy, however, have been stagnation and vulnerability.

The platform outlines a step-by-step approach of economic destabilization of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, and directly announces a policy of confrontation with the Soviets. Demanding the "independence" of Eastern Europe, the platform states:

Rather than effectively resisting such efforts, the Nixon-Ford Administration has looked favorably on such steps as subsidizing US-USSR trade by giving the Soviet Union concessionary credits, promoting trade increases because of a shortrun hope of using trade to modify political behavior, and even placing major United States energy investments in pawn to Soviet Union policy. Where bilateral trade arrangements with the USSR are to our economic advantage, we should pursue them, but our watch-words would be tough bargaining and concrete economic, political or other benefits for the United States.

Attacking the "USSR military dominance" of Eastern Europe as a "source of oppression" for those populations, the platform threatens that Europe will be in crisis "until these countries regain their independence."

While calling for preparation for war and economic blackmail of the Soviets, the Democratic policy pronouncement outlines a program of energy development camps and carefully allocated food shipments for those third world nations not slated for genocide.

The Democrats' foreign policy platform thus fully confirms — down to the rantings against "international terrorism" by Carter and Mondale during their acceptance speeches — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's assertion that there is no substantial difference between his policies and Carter's. To underscore that point, New York Times columnist C.L. Sulzberger wrote this week that while Carter was free to oppose Kissinger's pet notion of "limited nuclear war" — Carter's only discernable disagreement with Kissinger — for purposes of campaign rhetoric, he will be expected to reverse that view once he is in office.

Democrats Parade Unity In Support of Fascist Platform

In a frightening nationally televised spectacle, the Democratic Party leadership trotted one after another to the Convention microphone to declare their support for imposition of this fascist program on the United States. Characterizing the convention and its candidate, the Chicago Tribune, representing pro-growth mid-western industrial layers, was led to observe in its editorial July 17:

There is a place in political life for dreams and for the ability to inspire unity and willingness to inspire sacrifice. This ability enabled great leaders like Churchill and de Gaulle to do wonders for their country. It also enabled Adolf Hitler to do immeasurable harm.

The convention keynote, given by shuffling black Texas Congresswoman Barbara Jordan of Watergate notoriety, was an attempt to turn the gathering from the beginning into a Nazi rally. Rejecting the possibility of a programmatic alternative to the economic depression, Jordan preached to the audience that problems can be solved spiritually, through the development of a sense of "national community" (Hitler's Volksgemeinschaft).

Congressman Morris Udall attempted to coalesce all dissenting delegates behind Jordan's call, declaring on Wednesday that he was withdrawing from the presidential nomination race, urging his delegates to vote for Institute for Policy Studies creature, Jimmy Carter. Udall declared that the candidate of the party was unimportant; the Democrats have a platform, he ranted.

That program was summarized by Congressman Peter Rodino, as he placed Carter in nomination:

We in the Democratic Party must turn away from the division of yesterday and set before the American people an agenda of sacrifice for today in the hope that tomorrow will be better. If we have the courage to put the facts honestly and intelligently before the American people, they have the strength and the wisdom to make the crucial choices.

Jimmy Carter himself, in accepting the mantle of Democratic Party Führer, couched his willingness to implement the party platform in a series of clichés about faith, truth and harmony. Carter had no need to more specifically declare allegiance to the party's platform: a speech the Presidential nominee delivered to the Democratic Party platform Committee June 16, 1976, a speech which bore the earmarks of Trilateral Commission authorship, was used almost verbatim as the party's platform draft.

In that speech Carter declares the need for "a streamlined, efficient government," and attacks the corporate sector with the demand that the activity of lobbyists "be more thoroughly revealed and controlled" and the closeness between industry and the regulatory agencies be busted. Carter calls for an independent "Attorney General" to target the anti-fascist opposition while outlining a detailed program of "public needs jobs" in such areas as "repairing railroad beds" and "increased emphasis on productivity." He also demands "standby wage and price controls," attacks welfare cheats and proposes labor pools be put to work on "energy development" — to complement his demand for "energy conservation."

"We must substantially shift our efforts to increase our production of coal" Carter declares. He also demands a national health insurance program to impose corporatism on the nation's faltering health care system.

On foreign policy Carter demands "a well organized and effective fighting force" and threatens the Soviets with warnings that "Eastern European countries must regain their independence."

While Carter ended his quest for the nomination with platitudes, he began it with open demands for the fascist reorganization of America. In announcing his candidacy for the presidency, December 12, 1974, Carter declared:

We can then face together the tough long-range solutions to our economic woes. Our people are ready to make personal sacrifices when clear national economic policies are devised and understood. We must even face the prospect of changing our basic ways of living. This change will either be made on our own initiative in a planned and rational way, or forced on us with chaos and suffering by the inexorable laws of nature.

In a most hideous declaration of the changes in "our basic ways" he will oversee, Carter told the Conference of Mayors June 29, 1976:

In terms of public employment, I favor an improved CETA program, an accelerated Public Works Program, and funds for a total of some 800,000 summer jobs. Like some of you I remember the impact of the CCC and WPA in the 1930's and I think similar initiatives are called for today, but with stress on urban rather than rural work projects and with maximum possible local control over those projects.

These policies should be rammed through by local government operatives, Carter told the National Governor's Conference July 6, 1976:

The states have been the laboratories of public policy. They have pioneered... economic, labor and social programs... The states should serve as fifty independent experiments.

Wall Street Economists Move to Draft Specific Actions to Implement Platform

Even before Carter officially closed the convention with a parade to the podium of Democratic Party National officials in homage to him and the cabal's economic policies, the Institute's press conduit, the Washington Post announced that a gaggle of Wall Street-allied economists were drafting specific actions to implement the program. The Post announced a new staff coordinator on economics for Carter, Congressional Joint Economic Committee staffer Jerry Jasinowski, the principle drafter of the Humphrey-Hawkins slave labor public works bill. Jasinowski will coordinate with Wharton School Professor Lawrence Klein, who is already overseeing a group of top Wall Street-allied economists including Charles Schultz, Joseph Pechman from the Brookings Institution and Harvard University's Stanley Surrey to draft concrete proposals for Carter to implement. Klein declared that his fascist band was working on "indexing" — the policy of linking wage hikes to ostensible inflation rates, a policy which decimated Brazil and meant millions of lives. These and other advisors will dictate legislation and draft speeches that increasingly approach the "Folk Community" policing of slave labor and economic decimation blueprinted by the Institute for Policy Studies in their "unofficial" platform circulated at the convention.

I.P.S. "Platform": Pure Hitler

The I.P.S. "Platform," written by Marcus Raskin, co-director of I.P.S. in conjunction with members of the New Democratic Coalition including Congressman Ron Dellums and Senator George McGovern, was the purest expression of Nazi ideology circulated at the convention. The document builds up the notion of community identity, detailing a community structure to police fascist programs. Declaring that it is a mistake to assume "the employment difficulties of the economy are temporary" Raskin and Co. call for a "full employment program that must be seen as a structural change in the American economy."

"These must be decided locally by communities" and ensure "worker community participation" and participation of workers in "their work." The community would police the work sites, "would have the power to recharter corporations, invest in them and buy them." A brainwashing structure would be established "in new kinds of education schools" which would develop "understandings and skills for the operation of large scale enterprises."

Welfare recipients are targeted for a program implemented in California by then-Governor Ronald Reagan, the establishing of "poor people's corporations" to determine the kinds of services given to the community." Local community groups would oversee energy projects and control a "National Community Health Service" staffed by "health workers" which would eliminate most hospital services.

Raskin blatantly calls for the massive resettling of city workers into the countryside:

"Legislation should be fashioned which will help people in large cities resettle in small towns. Such legislation would include the reclamation of land around small towns (green belts) and land for "common agricultural use." The Institute planners hope eventually to eliminate the necessity for jackboot enforcement of their policies by brainwashing workers into determining for themselves "what crimes and punishments they want to have."

The Democratic Convention sealed the fate of the Democratic Party as a fascist propaganda unit. The political allegiance of workers across the country, watching the spectacle of the Democratic Party's takeover by fascism on their TV screens this week, shifted en masse toward the Labor Party — their only alternative to the Democrats' program of war, slave labor and genocide. At the convention itself this political shift was recognized by Louisiana Governor Edwin Edwards, Edwards told a Carter representative at a caucus meeting "You don't know beans about politics. If this is the platform and the people of Louisiana find out about him (pointing to a rep. of the LaRouche campaign) then..."

Resistance To Carter Fascist Policies Bursts Out At Democratic Convention

The carefully cultivated press lie of Democratic unity behind Nelson Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission candidate Jimmy Carter crumbled in the face of strong opposition to the fascist policies which Carter stands for during the course of the Democratic Convention. The result of the Democratic Party's "success" in shoving Carter down delegates' throats in numerous skirmishes at the convention can only be massive defection out of the Democratic Party toward the Labor Party in the weeks ahead.

Before the convention opened, U.S. Labor Party calls to a representative sampling of more than 200 delegates across the country found approximately 90 per cent of the delegates already questioning who positioned such an obscurity to garner the Democratic nomination on a platform which would destroy industry and agriculture. Delegates arriving in New York recognized the psychological truth of the USLP brief "Is Jimmy Carter Brainwashed?" and responded by buying over 100 copies which were circulated and discussed throughout the convention. More than 50 delegates met with the U.S. Labor Party during the convention, with several pulling other delegates into meetings which frequently ended with the question of whether the Labor Party was on the ballot in their own state. Two state delegations invited the Labor
