

An accident blew the cover off the theater project in 1966: the shooting of Lawrence P. Neal, a black poet who refused to join the Jones outfit, by some of Jones' young Nazis-in-training. Police raided the Black Arts theater and found a large arsenal. This was the Hanafi weapons center kept by Khaalis.

Several of Khaalis's associates were arrested for possession of deadly weapons, including his son-in-law Abdul Azziz. The charges were mysteriously dismissed on grounds of "insufficient evidence."

Jones, under a cloud and under investigation by a Congressional committee, was dispatched to Newark, where he was transformed into Imamu Baraka following the 1967 riots there.

Khaalis moved into a $15,000 a year assignment running a "street academy" for the Urban League; through this offspring of Clark's theater, Khaalis was responsible for developing several of the LEAA Harlem street gangs. Clark continued to serve as overall controller for both sides of the operation.

But it was in Newark, with Baraka, that the next key figure was to appear: John H. Rees. Announcing himself as the head of a corporation called New Goals, Inc. Rees arrived in Newark with the aid of the Newark Police Department and helped Baraka and Kamiel Waddud, leader of the city's Sunni Muslims and the immediate influence in the Jones-Baraka "born-again" transformation, plan the takeover of the anti-poverty apparatus. Waddud was also a close associate of Khaalis. Orchestrated black-white racial confrontations prominently featuring Baraka quickly followed.

During this period, Khaalis, still based in New York under Clark, was commuting to Baltimore and Washington. In D.C. he established the beginnings of the group responsible for the recent terrorism, the "Hanafi Rifle and Pistol Club" at Howard University.

In Baltimore Khaalis was arrested by the FBI for extortion and planning to rob a Baltimore bank. He was found legally sane, but "disturbed" by a court psychiatrist, and once again he was given protection and the charges were dropped. During his commuting, Khaalis was still receiving $15,000 per year from the New York Urban League, but when the "street academy" project went broke in 1970, Khaalis moved to Washington permanently to care for the fledgling terrorist unit which he continued to call the Hanafi.

In 1970, the third controller, Jerry Wilson, was serving as the police chief of Washington, D.C. During the period from 1970-72 his special agent was none other than the man-on-the spot when Baraka's new belief structure Kawaida appeared in Newark, John H. Rees.

Rees's tracks turn up all over the Rockefeller family networks. He has worked for the Church League of America and has published a sheet called "Information Digest" for law enforcement agencies. Rees's wife Sheila has been a member of the National Lawyers Guild (defends terrorists) and the Institute for Policy Studies (Japanese Red Army, Weathermen). John H. Rees is also employed on the staff of Congressman Larry McDonald (D-Ga.). On March 10, the first day of the D.C. terror siege McDonald's office put out a statement calling for immediate increase in police state "martial law" powers along the lines demanded by the LEAA task force headed up by Jerry Wilson in a report issued only the week before.

In an attempt to justify such measures, the McDonald office statement asserted that during the period from 1970-72 — the same period when Khaalis arrived in Washington and Rees worked as Wilson's special agent — the Hanafi sect had been heavily infiltrated by the D.C. police department. If only law enforcement reform guidelines had not forced Wilson to remove his men, McDonald's office mourned, they could have prevented the Hanafi kidnapping.

But in the face of the chain of circumstantial evidence from Clark to Baraka, Waddud, Khaalis, Rees and Wilson — who will believe that the Hanafi incident was anything but a stage-managed intelligence operation from start to finish?

Sunni Muslim Leader: Hanafi Terrorists "Are Correct"

The following is an interview with Kamiel Wadud, a Sunni Muslim leader in the Newark-Elizabeth area of New Jersey conducted at the time that the Washington terrorist action was at its height.

Q: What can you tell us about the background of the terrorists and their leader, Hammas Abdul Khaalis?

Wadud: First of all, I don't call this a terrorist action...these people are completely justified...White America is entirely racist...they wouldn't listen otherwise. These peoples' arguments are correct. The Hanafi are right about the movie ("Mohammed: Messenger of God" - ed.). I have documentation in my hand of the meeting of the World Muslim Organization that passed a resolution denouncing the movie on April 8, 1974...

Q: Who is their leader?

Wadud: It is clear who he is. He was national recording secretary of the Nation of Islam until 1963, when he left along with Malcolm X and became a Sunni (a generic term for all Muslims outside the Nation of Islam, of which the Hanafis are one sect - ed.). In 1973, his children were murdered. This is an eye for an eye...The people who killed his children haven't been executed.

Q: Mr. Wadud, what do you think can be done to resolve this situation?

Wadud: First you need his own people to go in there. I've been asked but I don't know if I'll go. If it were the Chinese, who would you send in to negotiate? He has to see his people. They've got Arab diplomats going in.

there. Who the hell are they? All these people are is — they spend two years in Washington getting laid and drinking, then they leave. Khaalis told you what they thought of them when they seized the Egyptian building. You can't settle this thing with them.

Q: Could you be more specific about a settlement?

Wadud: First, you need his people to go in there and like I said, I've been asked and I don't know if I will. I've been on the phone for 24 hours as a matter of fact, 24 hours straight. The authorities have asked me to come. You know what would help, if somebody could bring materials to substantiate the Hanafi position on the movie, the conference resolutions and things. He is prepared to die for his family, for what he believes and for what was done to his family. He'll die for what was done to his family. He has to be told that he will be leaving a nation of believers if he dies. But you know, he would lead them, his followers, into the gates of Hell if necessary.

Q: Well, if some settlement were reached somehow, and this thing ends, suppose the movie were to continue being shown. Would such incidents continue?

Wadud: You bet. He wouldn't leave his back unprotected. There may be back-up units...The authorities are nervous about that.

Q: Mr. Wadud, the logic of your view seems to be in the direction of utterly justifying what is now being done in Washington. The logic of your approach seems to be to encourage a bloodbath.

Wadud: Well, now, wait a minute. What I'm saying is if we could give him sympathetic support he might consider not killing anybody.

Q: You think that just sympathetic support would induce him to forget his beliefs, his sect, or as you keep saying, his family?

Wadud: I've simply explained the power and strength of his motivations. Someone from his own people has to be the mediator and liaison in this. Not some phoney house nigger.

Q: Mr. Wadud, are you familiar with a man named John Rees?

Wadud: Who? Well, uh, let me see..uh, spell it...Oh Yeah! John Rees, the Englishman. Yes, he came into Newark with that money a few years back. They say he inherited the 'Peyton Place' fortune and lost it in a court fight or something...A real hustler. By the way, where did you hear of him?

Q: Well, he's mentioned in a book on the 1967 Newark race riots. It says that he was involved in negotiations with Imamu Baraka...and yourself.

Wadud: Yeah, well, he put something together.

Q: Would you say that he had a positive impact in Newark?

Wadud: Well, he did some right moves. Accidentally probably, in spite of other intentions probably.

Q: Where did his money come from? Do you know?

Wadud: Federal money. He had pull in Washington.

Profiling A Nuclear Terrorist

Copies of a confidential FBI report documenting the totally fabricated plan of a neo-Nazi group to launch nuclear attacks against U.S. cities have been circulated to the National Security Council, the U.S. Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF), and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) among other Capital Hill agencies. More importantly, this nuclear terrorist scenario was also forwarded to scientists at the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) and congressmen on the McClellan Subcommittee on Domestic Terrorism — the primary targets of the FBI-Justice Department psychological warfare operation.

According to sources close to the Justice Department, the FBI report features plans — ostensibly recovered from the right-wing, paramilitary National Revolutionary Army (NRA) — on how to steal top-secret lasers, nuclear wastes, and classified research materials for making an atomic bomb. The report profiles NRA leader Frank Draeger, who is at present awaiting trial on gun- and drug-running charges in Trenton, N.J., as the prototypical nuclear terrorist.

The report is a hoax. The nuclear terrorist scenario set out in its pages is not the brainchild of a small group of socio-pathic right wingers, but is the product of the FBI itself. As any qualified nuclear engineer knows, there is no way that an explosive nuclear device can be assembled in a basement. An engineering feat of this magnitude requires scientific capacities on a scale available to no more than half a dozen governments internationally. Agent Draeger, now being accused by his FBI controllers of issuing orders from prison to the NRA for a nuclear attack on a U.S. city, is merely a pawn of the Justice Department and FBI, the perpetrators of this scheme. While the scenario is totally faked, the National Security Council may still order FBI personnel to carry it out — providing NRAers or some other group of terrorist agents with a live bomb — at a cost of millions of American lives.

The Draeger nuclear terrorist scenario and others now in the works are part of an attempt by the Trilateral Commission to stampede Congress into passing the emergency police-state measures proposed by the Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) and to force U.S. scientists to accept further restrictions in nuclear energy develop-
