

5. The Right-Left Networks In The Mideast

With great effort, the Arab states and Iran have begun to uproot the entrenched network of British-Zionist underground terror that has plagued the Middle East for several generations. With the close cooperation of the security services of Western Europe, the USSR, and the "American faction" of the CIA — that is, the non-Zionist Lobby faction — the Arabs have dismantled a large part of the destabilizing network. But the remaining nest of extremists, Moslem reactionaries, and old British Colonial Office agents is being activated full-tilt by the Israeli intelligence command and their British sponsors.

The terrorists in question involve the following networks, in part: first, the freemason and Bahai cult elite based largely in Israel and Iran with extensive penetration into the Arab world, in coordination with Scotland Yard; second, the ultra-rightist Moslem reactionaries such as the Iranian Shi'ite mullahs and the Sunni Moslem Brotherhood, including the Imam Musa Sadr in southern Lebanon, Ayatollah Khomeiny in Iraq, and certain Algerian support networks; third, the Palestinian extremists whose chief representative is Abu Nidal, now under increasing suspicion by the Iraqi authorities; and fourth, the ultra-rightist Lebanese Maronite militia led by Camille Chamoun and the Gemayel family, with important connections to Israeli military intelligence and into the Egyptian Coptic community.

All four of these networks are jointly supported by the Order of Malta, the City of London financial establishment, and the old Zionist elite.

In various Middle East states, these networks have been, and are, responsible for civil wars, insurrections, terrorism and political assassinations, religious strife, and economic sabotage. The following brief grid details the recent activities of these forces:

— In Iran, an unholy alliance of rightist Shi'ites and left-wing and liberal "democrats" is in the midst of a virtual insurrection to break the Shah and his commitment to industrial development. Even the London Times reported this week that a "British conspiracy" has been blamed for the troubles, and a key ally of the Shah this week attacked "forces trained in the Nazi and fascist schools" as responsible for the trouble. The Shah, who has held back from naming the British, has blamed "outside forces."

— In Saudi Arabia, Palestinian extremists have attacked Saudi oil fields. Abu Nidal, based in Baghdad, took responsibility for the huge explosion that temporarily shut down Saudi production in 1977,

Charge Israelis Bombed Beirut PLO Offices

Following the Aug. 13 bomb explosion that destroyed an apartment complex in Beirut which housed the offices of the Palestinian Liberation Front, PLF leader Abul Abbas and Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, exposed the incident as an act of Israeli secret services. The Palestinian leaders' statements countered initial reports that Abul Abbas had charged Syria for responsibility for the crime, and undercuts British and Israeli intelligence efforts to foment inter-Arab hostilities by perpetrating this and similar terrorist incidents.

In an interview with the West German daily Frankfurter Rundschau this week, Iraq's Ambassador to Bonn, Zuhayr al-Bayragdar, underlined Israel's role in international terror:

Q: You had hardly taken over your position in Bonn when German security measures had to be intensified because of awareness of a series of assassinations at Iraqi embassies. Did you feel more secure at your earlier post in East Berlin?

Bayragdar: As is known, the Israeli secret service has no possibility of developing activities in East Germany, activities that could endanger any Arab.

Actually I expect from this side only unfriendly intentions. As regards my security and that of the Iraqi Embassy in the Federal Republic, I believe that it has been guaranteed by the responsible authorities.

Q: Are you therefore less endangered than your Iraqi colleagues elsewhere?

Bayragdar: I do not know what the Zionists are planning. At any rate it cannot be anything good. Currently it must be tempting for them to become active and pin their actions on some party or other.

Q: Can you explain, after the detestable assassinations at the PLF headquarters in Beirut—to a normal German citizen who does not know anything about the contrasting interests in the Arab camp—why the Palestinians are blowing each other up instead of fighting jointly for an acceptable peace agreement in the Mideast, using means other than terrorist ones?

Bayragdar: Sooner or later it will be discovered that the detestable assassinations at PLF headquarters was a deed of the Israeli secret service.
