

Fraud makes mockery of U.S. elections

Austerity- and drug-pushers win through vote theft

Preliminary analysis of the nationwide pattern of vote fraud in the Nov. 7 elections reveals a comprehensive, precisely targeted operation by the London-controlled fraud machine to wipe out opposition to drug-running and terrorism, and potential support for the European Monetary System. In every case of documented or suspected fraud, the result was to weaken traditional Democrats or Republicans and replace them with British influenced candidates. Included in this pattern of fraud is the outright theft of a Baltimore congressional seat from U.S. Labor Party candidate Debra Hanania-Freeman (see box), by drug decriminalization advocate Parren Mitchell, and massive fraud against Labor Party congressional candidate Graham Lowry by the Kennedy machine in Boston.

Kissinger-Kennedy coalition

The official tallies throughout the country have put into office a Kissinger-Kennedy coalition, often across party lines, masquerading as representing the anti-inflation, pro-austerity mood of the population. "It is the historic mission of the Democratic Party to make austerity in government work," crowed Jerry Brown, the reelected Democratic governor of California. In the main, this is the explicit intention of the inconsistent mishmash of Republicans and Democrats credited with winning office.

Brown's election was combined with defeat for his Democratic running mate, Melvin Dymally; the new lieutenant governor will be Michael Curb, a Proposition 13-style Republican. Brown's personal victory, following his lying, budget-slashing performance, is due to both a fraud apparatus, and most importantly, the political suicide committed by previously pronuclear-energy Republican gubernatorial candidate Evelle Younger. Under Kissinger advice, Younger threw the election by trying to out-austerity Brown, and dropping his nuclear program.

The Kissinger hold over the Republican party is also responsible for the defeat of Meldrim Thomson, the Republican governor of New Hampshire whose name is synonymous with the Seabrook nuclear power plant. Other decent Republicans fell victim as well. Edward Brooke of Massachusetts, who holds the

Freeman in Baltimore: 'I Beat Parren Mitchell'

"There is no question that, if the vote of the living had been counted fairly, I won the 7th congressional seat from slave labor and marijuana decriminalization advocate Parren Mitchell," Dr. Debra Hanania-Freeman announced today from her Baltimore headquarters. "The 89 percent which my opponent received, as well as the 11 percent tally registered for me, is a statistical impossibility."

"In the official tallies," Freeman continued, "the fraud machine made one crucial mistake, and reported an honest tally in one precinct. As in the pattern of fraud carried out against the LaRouche presidential campaign in 1976 and other Labor campaigns, a precinct in which the Labor Party did not heavily campaign, this time in an Appalachian white neighborhood, was overlooked in the fraud, and actually reflects the minimal voting strength of the Labor Party. The vote in this precinct in Baltimore was 77-43, in favor of me."

The Freeman campaign and the national U.S. Labor Party headquarters have announced their intention to pursue the fraud case until justice is restored. "The Hanania-Freeman case is only the most glaring of wholesale vote fraud cases around the country in Tuesday's so-called election," Freeman said. "Millions of voters who pulled the lever for the Labor Party and for other antidrug, antiausterity or even simply pro-progress candidates were disenfranchised in order to make this election appear a mandate for antilabor austerity.

"It is of the utmost urgency that this impression be reversed, and that the real voice of the American population be heard to pave the way for U.S. entrance into the industrial renaissance being prepared by the founders of the European Monetary Fund."
