

making territorial claims on neighboring Ethiopia and Kenya. France maintains a strong position in the region with the presence of a military contingent in the new country of Djibouti. Giscard recently put forth a proposal for an all-parties conference to settle continued guerrilla warfare and end the potential flashpoint for regional war, and plan a concerted effort for the development of the area. This same proposal was discussed two weeks ago when Soviet Foreign Affairs Minister Andrei Gromyko went to Paris for talks with Giscard and Foreign Minister de Guiringaud.

Further headway was made towards an all-party conference this week when Giscard and Brezhnev held simultaneous talks with Ethiopian and Kenyan leaders. Brezhnev is reported to have urged visiting Ethiopian chief of state Mengistu to accept the conference-table approach proposed by Giscard. Earlier, a high-level Ethiopian delegation was in Paris Nov. 4, led by Colonel Berhanu Bayeh, where Giscard's proposal was reportedly discussed.

Giscard also held talks with Kenya's President Daniel Arap Moi and, according to Le Figaro Nov. 13, extended the conference proposal to include an economic development solution for wiping out starvation and epidemics in the region. Arap Moi was accompanied by his Ministers for Industry, Finance, and Defense, who met with their French counterparts.

On Nov. 14, Giscard met with Ivory Coast President Houphouet-Boigny, who is leading an Organization for African Unity (OAU) committee which has been set up to intervene in the Western Sahara conflict. Houphouet-Boigny just returned from a conference in Mali of the Economic Community of the West African States (ECOWAS), which established a Fund for Solidarity and Investment including the Ivory Coast, Upper Volta, Senegal, Mali, Mauritania, and Niger — all countries with close French ties.

Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals

The strengthening of East-West entente and cooperation took a giant step forward this week with the agreement between Bonn and East Germany on transportation and, at the same time, Hungarian leader Janos Kadar's groundbreaking trip to France.

Kadar's talks with Giscard, the first between French and Hungarian heads of state in the postwar era, were highlighted by Kadar's declaration that "we consider Europe to be an entity from the Atlantic to the Urals, and we are a force in making it so."

In a private conversation, nongovernment sources close to Moscow told the Paris correspondent of this review that the European Monetary System was the topic of extensive discussion between Ministers from the two countries, and that the EMS is considered "the embryo of a new world economic system."

In addition, Giscard reiterated his proposal, already made to the Soviets, for a conventional disarmament conference to include all nations that signed the Helsinki accords for peace and cooperation in Europe.

The ten-year agreement signed this week between the West and East German governments on improving transportation between Berlin and West Germany thus takes on broader significance. It is an urgently needed sign of lasting improvement of relations between the two Germanies, stabilizing the issue of West Berlin, a sore spot in East-West relations since the end of World War II and often used to manipulate Cold War crises. The agreement calls for the construction of a new highway linking Hamburg and West Berlin, and for the improvement of East German waterways through which most of West Berlin's commercial traffic passes. The financing will come principally from West Germany. This ten-year accord "and the special trade conditions" already granted East Germany, howled the London Times Nov. 15, "make East Germany an unofficial member of the European Community."

Germany, Japan firm Euro-Asian ties

West Germany, whose Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has worked in close partnership with Giscard in formulating the Grand Design growth policies of the EMS, currently holds the Presidency of the Council of the European Community, a role which France takes over on Jan. 1 — "D-Day" for the EMS. This week, West German Foreign Affairs Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher welcomed the five foreign ministers of the ASEAN organization (Indonesia, Singapore, Thailand, Malaysia, and the Philippines) to Brussels, with the following remarks on the roles of the EC, ASEAN, and the new EMS:

"I am particularly pleased that this first ministerial meeting between ASEAN and the Community takes place at a time when the Federal Republic of Germany holds the presidency of the summit. . . . Both have set themselves the aim of furthering the economic and social well-being of their member states. Both are, in their respective regions, major and recognized factors of stability and peace. With this conference we are adding to the regional an inter-regional dimension. This first meeting at ministerial level is a testimony to the will of both to join each other as partners in the work of building one world whose main characteristics are interdependence and cooperation.

"ASEAN and the Community have many basic convictions and many interests in common. Both view regional integration as an effective
