

The leaders of the world knew then, that this was the only way to finally solve the problems of starvation. But what is happening now? The resolutions are rotting on the shelves, and have not been implemented. They must be implemented, in order to save Africa, and develop the rest of the Third World, too.

After World War II, the United States helped Europe and Japan to recover, to rebuild their cities and economies. The IMF and the World Bank were created to help the West develop. Only they forgot about Africa, Latin America and the rest of Asia.

Men in Africa, in Europe, in America were all created in the image of God, and we all need collaboration and development.

In the United States and in Europe, I have seen steel factories closed down. We need that steel to build the trans-African railway. This would mean jobs. People would be paid. Your factories would be opened again, and people would have work here too. We need your science, your technology. I have heard that shipyards in Sweden have been closed down, because "there is no market." The market! We need those ships to bring in steel, all kinds of goods to Africa to make it developed, like here.

This is how I think it should work: accounts would be opened for each country, and 75% of the money paid in would be used for projects in the individual countries, and 25% for Africa-wide projects, like the trans-African railway, to develop the Sahara and irrigate it. The money will not go through Africa, but will come to Europe and the United States, to pay for these projects. We would ask the French to build, say, 70 factories in Africa; we could ask Italy to build 300 dams; we could ask Israel to develop the desert. Sweden could build floating plants, like nuclear plants, which could be transported down to Africa by sea and could go into operation immediately. Young Africans could come here to be trained and educated on how they can build such plants themselves. Long-term credits would be issued at low interest rates to finance this.

We need advanced technology to do this. That's the solution to the problems of Africa.

I would like to thank Europe—once you saved Africa from slavery, by banning the slave trade. Today you should act again. Today you should raise your voices to end the genocide in Africa.

Shall I show you the weapon you should use? The weapon is demonstrations! Here in Europe and the United States, the governments take notice of demonstrations. You should demonstrate in front of American embassies and consulates, with placards. You don't have to write much on these placards, just write, "We demand economic independence for Africa, we demand a new world economic order!" If you do this, you will have done more for Africa than someone who sends a ton of food. Follow the beacon of the Schiller Institute and march to build a new world economic order, and to save Africa.
