Minnesota court backs 'grass tax' law

The Minnesota Supreme Court has handed down a ruling upholding the state's pro-marijuana "grass tax" law, which is being hailed by proponents of drug legalization as a model for the rest of the country.

The 1986 law, the first in the country, provides that the state sell drug stamps to drug pushers. Drug stamps can be purchased through the mail or at the state revenue departments at the price of $3.50 for each gram of marijuana, or $200 per gram of cocaine.

According to the Supreme Court decision, revenue officials must guarantee confidentiality to those buying stamps, in order, in the view of the court, to ensure that drug dealers are allowed the constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination.

At least 12 other states have already patterned laws after Minnesota's, the most recent being Utah and Illinois, which imposed drug taxes this year.

Inspection of migrant labor camps cut back

Inspection of migrant labor camps in Belle Glade, Florida and the surrounding area of Palm Beach County will be cut in half, due to cutbacks in state funding for county health departments. The Florida state legislature has cut $5.5 million from health programs, and the Palm Beach County budget will suffer cuts of $600,000.

Belle Glade has one of the highest densities of AIDS infection in the country, and a particularly high density of "non-high-risk-group" cases.

The cutbacks in inspections for the area were admitted to EIR by a spokesman for the Palm Beach County Health Department, who also reported that the department has frozen hiring of new personnel as a result of the cuts in state funding for certain programs. County Health Unit personnel who previously inspected migrant camps full time will now be assigned to additional duties.

County Health Department spokesmen would acknowledge only an "indirect effect" on the AIDS situation in the area, claiming that the AIDS problem does not exist in the migrant labor camps as such, but in nearby boarding houses, which are not inspected by the county health departments.

AIDS found rampant among runaway teens

There are now 20,000 homeless or runaway teens on the streets of New York City, the New York Post reported on Sept. 7, and, according to a survey conducted by Montefiore Medical Center's AIDS in Adolescence Program, AIDS is running rampant among this population.

Covenant House and Montefiore Center are testing teenagers for AIDS on a voluntary basis only, and so far, at Covenant House, 30-40% are testing positive.

According to Dr. James Kennedy, medical director of Covenant House, "These were all sexually transmitted infections. There were no intravenous drug users in the test group. The significant thing is that we're seeing as many infected girls as we are infected boys. . . . This is a very real issue . . . they are acquiring and transmitting the virus. . . . If you look at the overall number of people we were seeing infected in the gay community in 1979 and 1980, we're seeing at least as many now in the street kid population."

Dukakis's 'war on drugs' called a sham

Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis's war on drugs is "a sham," wrote Boston Herald columnist Don Feder, in a commentary on Sept. 1. Rejecting the Massachusetts governor's criticism of the Reagan-Bush war on drugs as hypocritical, Feder goes on to examine the Dukakis record in his home state of Massachusetts:

- At St. Margaret's Hospital in the Dorchester area of Boston, 10% of newborn babies test positive for cocaine.

- The Roxbury-Dorchester neighborhood is being turned into a shooting gallery. The Boston Police Department reports that 34% of the homicides in the city in the first six months of 1988 were drug-related, up 9% from the previous year.

- Between Dukakis's furlough system for convicts and prison breakouts, the Massachusetts correctional system has become a "revolving door" for drug pushers. Dukakis has also pardoned 21 drug pushers in the last four years, including cocaine and heroin distributors.

Cap Weinberger sees dangerous shift in U.S.

In an Aug. 12 interview with the British Broadcasting Corporation, former U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger warned about "a very substantial, unfortunately substantial, isolationist, protectionist mood in the United States," and blamed Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis for exploiting this mood for political gain.

The shift in mood, Weinberger said, "takes many forms. One of them is trying to find some rationalization for bringing the troops home. They can't find it in any improved behavior in the Soviets or any lessening of the basic Soviet threat, and so they find it in some kind of complaint about Europe or Asia . . . not doing enough themselves. There's nothing that is going to help world security by bringing the American troops home. The American troops serve a very important purpose for our own country, and also for the allied countries, and I hope very much that the isolationist mood doesn't ever reach a majority in the United States. . . . It's very dangerous, it's very unwelcome."

He attacked "people like Mr. Dukakis, who continually talk about how it will be safe for us to spend less on defense, to serve their own political purposes."

Weinberger also attacked as "absolutely wrong" and "a commonly held myth," the critique that his pro-defense policies caused the biggest budget deficit in American history. "The defense requests were repeatedly cut," he said. "They were cut by about $125 billion over the next five years from what we actually needed. . . . The facts are that defense in the United States added very substantially to the military strength and deterrent power of the whole alliance. But it was also very good for the economy."

Ollie North wrecked DEA anti-drug effort

Lt. Col. Oliver North's sabotage of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration plans to destroy the Medellín cocaine cartel, was featured prominently in the Colombian newspaper El Espectador Aug. 30-31. The exposé confirms EIR's charge that North protected the cartel, because they were his partners in his operation to supply the Nicaraguan Contras.

Using informant Adler Berriman Seal (a.k.a. Barry Seal), the DEA had begun an operation to capture the chiefs of the Medellín Cartel. But the operation was blown, the newspaper charges, when North leaked the information that Seal had gathered to the Washington Times, which published Seal's story on how the Sandinistas were involved in the dope trade.

Because of the leak, the DEA operation had to be suspended (it revealed the names and activities of the undercover DEA agents), the cartel members could not be captured, and the main man responsible for the operation, Barry Seal, was assassinated by cartel murderers.

Quayle: I don't trust smiling Gorbachov

"I Don't Trust Smiling Mikhail, Says Quayle," was the headline in the Daily Express of London Sept. 7, one of several papers in Europe that featured Republican vice-presidential nominee Sen. Dan Quayle's comments to the Washington Post the day before, attacking the myths in the West surrounding Gorbachov.

"As far as Gorbachov is concerned, he's new, he has a different approach to things, and his mannerisms and style are unfortunately pleasing to the West," Quayle said. "I say unfortunately, because I don't think from an ideological point of view he's any different from Brezhnev or anybody else. . . . I mean perestroika is nothing more than refined Stalinism—kick their people out and bring your people in."

Referring to Soviet handling of dissent in Eastern Europe, Quayle says: "Poland doesn't look good right now."

New Mexico utility lays off 800 employees

Eight hundred employees have been laid off at Public Service Co. of New Mexico, in an effort by the utility to stave off financial ruin. The utility has incurred $1.2 billion in debt since 1972, for their 10.2% share in the three Palo Verde nuclear plant units. The New Mexico Public Utility Commission has not allowed a rate increase since 1984, and the utility has already sold off its share of two of the three units, to raise funds.

Due to the collapse of industrial and commercial electricity growth since the bottom fell out of the oil market five years ago, the utility has been left with more capacity than it has customers to sell the power to, and has been trying to sell its surplus externally. Limits to their power transmission infrastructure have prevented them from doing so.

A plan to restructure the company to be able to build the transmission lines and sell the power has been withdrawn, due to inter-venor opposition, which has left the company unable to meet its financial payments.

The layoffs, according to the Albuquerque Tribune, will have an economic impact of about $40 million in the state, including the loss of business by the families that are affected. The utility has 4,000 employees in total.

Briefly

● DUKAKIS ON CHINA: Columnists Evans and Novak on Sept. 7 quoted a speech by Michael Dukakis in Canton, P.R.C. in 1985: "I was a 13-year old boy at the Baker School in Brookline, and I was asked to debate changes in China. I delivered a ringing condemnation of the Kuomintang, Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist party, and strongly advocated revolution in China. So, you see, you have a friend here. In fact, some friends of President Reagan occasionally refer to Massachusetts as the 'People's Republic of Massachusetts.'"

● WILLIAM WELD, former head of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, closed the DoJ's inquiry into the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy and the Rev. Martin Luther King. Weld, who resigned in March, wrote the House Judiciary Committee that all leads had been checked, finding "no persuasive evidence" to support conspiracy theories.

● THE ALL-MALE Bohemian Club is under investigation for sex discrimination. If the investigation finds discrimination against women, the club could lose its liquor license. The exclusive club, located 60 miles outside San Francisco, is the scene of bizarre cavortings and mid-summer nude theatrics by such international notables as Henry Kissinger and Helmut Schmidt.

● FRANCIS L. YOUNG, an administrative judge with the Drug Enforcement Administration, found that "marijuana, in its natural form, is one of the safest therapeutically active substances known to man." Judge Young ruled that, "by any measure of rational analysis, marijuana can be safely used within a supervised routine of medical care."
