

ment to development in the Southern Hemisphere.

They are telling us that you can always make a deal with a genocidalist; unborn children are the real threat. Simone Veil, French social affairs minister and head of the French Cairo delegation, told the Quotidien de Paris of May 16 that the "population explosion" has severe consequences "for the environment, but also for development and health." She thinks this explosion, together with poverty, is the main problem to fight. Of course, she is against forced birth control, but she will try anything to encourage them psychologically to use it. Behind the direct assault of Anglo-American anti-natalist measures, with mass sterilizations in Mexico, Zaire, and Brazil, the official French position is to educate the "natives" and to get them to understand that they should stop reproducing "for their own good." The "soft" method works with the "hard" one to produce the same result: It used to be said in Nantes or Bordeaux that every clever slave-owner would bring along a lady social worker to distribute some goodies, so the slaves would be convinced that slavery was their destiny.

The French position is based on a malthusian, Darwinian outlook: The world can only host a limited number of inhabitants, since its resources are limited. This is admitted in the official French position paper for the Cairo conference—available at the National Institute for Demographic Studies—where it is stated, without argument or discussion, as if it were self-evident: "The neo-malthusian idea of a negative effect of population growth on economic development is still valid today. It is one of the main justifications for birth control policies, although it is not the only one" [see EIR, July 15, 1994].

In keeping with this same outlook, more and more leaders claim that "ethnic wars" in the world, such as in Bosnia or Rwanda, are part of "millenary conflicts" spurred by "overpopulation." Massacres of Bosnians or Tutsis are considered as part of a process that can only be stopped by limiting

Resolution calls for new resistance movement

This resolution was adopted by participants in the Schiller Institute's conference:

Nearly 50 years after the end of the Second World War—a war which killed at least 50 million people and left behind a Europe in ruins—we today, in commemorating the Resistance fight against the Nazi dictatorship, have come together in this spirit, to call for a worldwide resistance movement against the modern forms of "totalitarianism" and against "genocide." It is in the name of this policy that at the upcoming population conference in Cairo, the strategists of the U.N. plan to establish a one-world dictatorship.

1) It is intolerable for mankind that today, 50 years after the Holocaust, under the control of supranational organizations such as the U.N., a brutal genocide is perpetrated in countries such as Rwanda, Bosnia, Somalia, and others. While in Geneva, the "merchants of death" attempt to carve Bosnia into pieces, in Rwanda today—before an indifferent world public—millions of people are being slaughtered. Rwanda is one example among many. It demonstrates the consequences of the neo-colonial policy of the North against the South, which consists in a policy of totally refusing any economic help for the South. The North draws a new "Limes" wall between those whom it calls "the barbarians of the South" and the so-called "rich nations" of the North.

2) It is unbearable as well for mankind to watch as the countries of eastern Europe sink into misery, given that the West refused to respond to the "historic chance" which presented itself in 1989. As a result of the West's refusal to give economic aid to the East, a situation of uncontrollable conflicts, chaos, and the threat of dictatorships is brought about in East and Central Asia which potentially could lead to nuclear conflicts.

3) The modern war takes the form of a conflagration of famines, epidemics, and population wars, which at an ever more rapid pace extends across the world map. Those same monetarists, whose monetary policy for the last 20 years—the insane International Monetary Fund conditionalities—have killed 500 million people in the developing sector and who today have built up a gigantic financial bubble—are now working under the auspices of the U.N. and continuing directly the infamous eugenics conferences of the Nazis, organizing the Cairo population conference in order to implement their neo-malthusian strategy: the killing of half the world's population!

On the eve of the twenty-first century, when the majority of the world's population stands in urgent need of development, and in the spirit of natural law as it was developed by the spiritual father of the Renaissance, the great Cardinal Nicolaus of Cusa, we call for an international resistance movement which will fight for the dignity of man, for the defense of the "inalienable rights of man," and which will resist those who violate these fundamental rights of man.

We therefore have called for a worldwide resistance action. Our aim is to stop this Cairo conference and bring those who plan the genocide before a tribunal, where they will be judged for crimes against humanity.
