

have imposed the policies that have destroyed nations over the past 30 years, is crashing, LaRouche said. "The time for justice has come."

Oct. 25: EIR publishes "While Monetarism Dies," LaRouche's preface to the Chinese translation of his economic text, So, You Wish to Learn All About Economics?

Nov. 1: EIR publishes LaRouche's essay, "How Deregulation Shot Down the U.S. Airlines."

Nov. 1: LaRouche releases "On November 6, Reality Strikes!" (see EIR, Nov. 8). As the nation and the world confront an onrushing global financial crisis in the post-election period, the FDR-PAC is poised to intervene with an agenda for urgently needed policy changes.

Nov. 6: LaRouche writes "On the Subject of Evolution: The Descent to Bush from Man," in which he takes up the issues raised by Pope John Paul II's address on evolution, from the standpoint of his own expert knowledge as a physical economist (see EIR, Nov. 15). "Virtually all extant academic theories of evolution, including those which contain some useful elements of research, are essentially ideological fabrications," he writes.

Nov. 6: LaRouche writes "The Murderous Issue of Food Policy" (see EIR, Nov. 15). "The issue of the right to food has become the choice of contest which will determine whether this imperilled civilization of our planet survives the closing years of this century," he says.

Nov. 7: LaRouche writes "Winning Your 'Uncivil Rights': How to Win Your Election" (see EIR, Nov. 15). The folly of the "civility" policy, the failure by some Democrats to call Nazi policies by name, led to electoral defeats, he says.

Nov. 9: LaRouche addresses an FDR-PAC forum in Washington, D.C., on the theme "Managed Health Care Is a Crime Against Humanity." Let's call a bottle of milk, a bottle of milk, and Nazi policies, Nazi policies, LaRouche insists.

Nov. 12: LaRouche releases "Ring Around China: Britain Seeks War" (see EIR, Nov. 22). He warns, "Unless the U.S. government acts to warn the British openly, that the U.S.A. will not tolerate the presently ongoing, geopolitical ringing of China, the U.S.A. will be at risk of losing all significant ability to deploy an effective foreign policy in defense of vital U.S. global interests."

Nov. 14: LaRouche writes "Russia's Relation to Universal History" (see EIR, Nov. 29). His discussions with Russians in recent years, LaRouche says, "have centered around the problems generated by the fact, that, for well-known historical reasons, few of even today's ostensibly well-educated Russians, know the most crucial facts respecting the last three centuries of history of their nation's relationship to Venice, the British Empire, western continental Europe, and the United States."

Nov. 19: LaRouche addresses an EIR-sponsored forum in Washington, D.C. (see EIR, Dec. 13, "The Vital Issues of Statecraft Facing America in 1997"). "We are in a period where small forces' flanking situations will have to rout the opposition," he says. "What is required is a Gideon's Army. If you wait for a majority, you're going to lose. If you wait for consensus, you will lose the world."

Nov. 26: LaRouche writes "Housing People in a 'Post-Industrial' U.S.A." (see EIR, Dec. 13), in which he examines U.S. housing policy from the standpoint of physical economy.

LaRouche must be exonerated in 1997

Despite a growing outcry from current and former elected officials, civil rights activists, religious leaders, and prominent individuals throughout the world, the U.S. government has still taken no action to exonerate Lyndon LaRouche and his associates, who were fraudulently convicted in a political frame-up, run by former U.S. President, drug kingpin, Moon-cult fellow-traveler, and knight of the British Empire, Sir George Bush. Furthermore, five associates of LaRouche—Anita Gallagher, Paul Gallagher, Donald Phau, Laurence Hecht, and Michael Billington—are still serving long sentences in Virginia state prisons, as part of the same political prosecution.

As the world heads toward the greatest financial and economic crisis in 500 years, the exoneration of LaRouche becomes an urgent matter for U.S. national security. Without LaRouche's direct leadership, the ability of the U.S. government to implement the necessary emergency economic measures, is doubtful. Stonewalling on LaRouche's exoneration not only condones the gross injustice done to LaRouche and his associates, but it leaves in place the nexus of corrupt U.S. Justice Department officials, the media, and the Anti-Defamation League (ADL), which remains a lethal cancer on America's political and legal system.

The "LaRouche" case was launched under U.S. Executive Order 12333, at the initiative of Sir George Bush's fellow knight, former U.S. Secretary of State Sir Henry Kissinger. Under National Security Decision Directive 3 (NSDD-3), Vice President Bush held ultimate responsibility for the foreign national-security operations through which the legal prosecutions against LaRouche were conducted.

Since being released on parole in January 1994, after serving five years in a federal prison, there has been a growing international movement calling for LaRouche's exoneration. Twelve and a half million pamphlets, titled "Summary of Relevant Evidence On the Record Demonstrating the Innocence of Lyndon LaRouche and Co-

Nov. 30-Dec. 5: Lyndon and Helga LaRouche make a week-long visit to Italy (see EIR, Dec. 13, pp. 8 and 49). On Nov. 30, they were hosted by Busseto, Giuseppe Verdi's hometown, at an event designed to build the movement to return to the "Verdi tuning," and revive Classical principles in musical composition. On Dec. 2, at the Circolo della Stampa

(similar to the National Press Club in Washington), LaRouche spoke at a conference co-sponsored by the Italian Solidarity Movement and the CDU party. He called on the audience to turn to the existing sources of Classical culture, to gather the moral and intellectual energies to face the current global financial collapse.

Defendants," have been distributed, and close to 750 current or former state legislators have signed an open letter to President Clinton and Congress calling for all measures to be taken to exonerate LaRouche. In 1995, the National Caucus of Black State Legislators passed a resolution asking Congress to investigate Justice Department abuses in the LaRouche cases.

Republicans in Congress contributed to the cover-up, by refusing to take up the LaRouche case in hearings held in 1995, into abuses of the Justice Department at Waco and Ruby Ridge. When asked to broaden the hearings to investigate the LaRouche case, Republicans refused, despite having been presented with sufficient evidence to warrant investigation.

From the beginning, the U.S. government knew LaRouche and his associates were innocent. To obtain the fraudulent convictions, prosecutors manufactured evidence, coached witnesses to lie, withheld evidence, conducted illegal wiretaps and break-ins, instituted a fraudulent bankruptcy, and participated in a media campaign to vilify LaRouche. To this day, many Americans continue to be affected by these defamations, avoiding political association with LaRouche, in fear of offending the Anglo-American Establishment. As LaRouche noted in EIR (Nov. 15, 1996, p. 31), "Whenever the name of 'LaRouche' is mentioned, credulous people suffer attacks of their own bad conscience, in tolerating what has been exposed as a fraudulent, politically motivated prosecution." Nevertheless, wherever citizens, judges, or elected officials have looked at the facts of the LaRouche case, they have recognized the magnitude of the injustice.

Prosecution of LaRouche condemned

Two independent panels of legal experts and elected officials have looked into the LaRouche case, and condemned the prosecution. A videotape of a September 1995 hearing, conducted by current state legislators, a former U.S. congressman, and international legal experts, is available from the Schiller Institute.

Six volumes of evidence of government misconduct were presented to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, and additional evidence has surfaced in subsequent proceedings. Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who represented LaRouche during the appeal process, has said that the LaRouche case "represented a broader range of deliberate cunning and systematic misconduct over a longer period of time utilizing the power of the federal government than any other prosecution by the U.S. Government in my time or to my knowledge."

The real criminals in the LaRouche cases, were the prosecutors and their accomplices. Vice President Bush was at the center of the infamous Contra cocaine-smuggling ring, carried out under the auspices of the same EO 12333 and NSDD-3 as the "LaRouche" case. Massachusetts Governor William Weld, who, as U.S. Attorney and, later, head of the Department of Justice Criminal Division, prosecuted LaRouche, covered up Bush's cocaine ring. Former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, who coordinated Bush's Contra cocaine ring, was also involved in LaRouche's prosecution. A May 1986 telex from Gen. Richard Secord to North, shows that North's apparatus gathered information against LaRouche. When this document surfaced in LaRouche's first trial in Boston, Federal Judge Robert Keeton ordered a search of Vice President Bush's office for documents about LaRouche. The case mis-tried shortly afterward, with the jury saying that they would have voted "not guilty" on all counts. Judge Keeton would later rule that the government was guilty of misconduct.

Lower-level operatives of the "Get LaRouche" task force, such as Loudoun County, Virginia Sheriff's Lt. Donald Moore and Cult Awareness Network (CAN) "de-programmer" Galen Kelly, spent time in jail on federal kidnapping charges. Moore had been a tentmate of North in Vietnam. The ADL was investigated by the San Francisco, California District Attorney for running an illegal spy ring.

Others in the prosecution team haven't fared too well either. Former Virginia Attorney General Mary Sue Terry, Loudoun County state prosecutor William Burch, and Loudoun County Sheriff John Isom were all roundly defeated in elections, in which they campaigned on anti-LaRouche platforms. CAN has been forced into bankruptcy.

The full exoneration of LaRouche, the freeing of his associates from prison, and the jailing of Sir George Bush and company, would be a fitting way to begin 1997.
