

Mahathir: Malaysia Was Not 9/11 'Launch Pad'

Malaysian Prime Minister Dr. Mahathir bin Mohamad responded to an FBI report that Malaysia was a "launch pad" for the Sept. 11 attacks, by pointing to the fact that only the United States itself could have been the launch pad for such a sophisticated operation. "These people were training in the U.S. all the time, and then they planned in America how to hijack American planes, at what time, which plane, which building. All that was done in America, not done in Malaysia," said the Prime Minister. He said the terrorist suspects had been travelling all over the world, including to Switzerland.

Newsweek reported that the FBI claims that a Malaysian, Yazid Sufaat, met with two of the accused 9/11 pilots, and financed Zacarias Moussaoui, now on trial in U.S. Federal court as the "20th hijacker." Dr. Mahathir said that he doubted that Sufaat, who is under detention in Malaysia for suspicion of domestic terrorism activities, was involved in the planning of the Sept. 11 attacks, and asked those who have information to provide it. "Let's see the evidence. It is very easy to say that he had done it, but did he do it in Malaysia, did he plan everything? I doubt it. . . . It's too sophisticated an operation," he said.

should take follow-up actions. The United States has considerable restrictive force to deal with Israel. It should let the Palestinian people really see that there is hope for the establishment of an independent Palestine state with East Jerusalem as the capital through peaceful means," as the only solution to resolve the conflict, and to solve "the problem of extremist organizations of Palestine and Israel." The commentary also called for the international community to "extend more realistic and effective support to Palestine."

On Jan. 29, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Kong Quan said that Arafat's leadership must be maintained. The authority of Arafat, who symbolizes the just cause of the Palestinian people, would help revive peace talks, Kong said. There were also reports in the Tel Aviv daily Yediot Ahronot, that a reception in Beijing to mark ten years of Chinese-Israeli ties, ended up as an insult to the Israelis. The reception was sharply downgraded in size and importance, and, interestingly, the room was decorated with the flag of Norway—site of the Oslo peace talks—rather than of Israel. Among other strains in Chinese-Israeli relations, is that Israel unilaterally (but under heavy U.S. pressure) had cancelled a contract to sell Phalcon reconnaissance aircraft to China in 2000. China has demanded some $1 billion in compensation, but nothing has been arranged.

China's Other Regional Ties

China is also developing other regional relationships. King Abdullah II of Jordan paid his second state visit to China on Jan. 17-21. Abdullah emphasized the importance of an independent Palestinian state, and discussed economic development, a critical issue for Jordan amidst the world depression and the Israel-Palestine conflict. Moroccan King Mohammed VI will pay a state visit to China on Feb. 4-9.

Iraq and Sudan are also of central importance. On Jan. 28, Zhu Rongji stated China's opposition to any arbitrary expansion of "anti-terrorist" military action, in his discussions with visiting Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz. Aziz was on his way to Russia for further talks.

Zhu Rongji, repeating statements by diplomatic éminence grise Vice Prime Minister Qian Qichen, said there should be no double standards in the fight against terrorism, and called for an early resolution of the Iraq issue, on the basis of relevant UN Security Council resolutions.

The strategic context of these talks, was described in China's Outlook Weekly on Jan. 16. The most serious issues for China's economic development, are the danger of deflation, which is much more serious even than falling exports; the financial problem posed by the falling Japanese yen; and the issue of strategic resources, endangered by the U.S. "war on terrorism," stated the author, a deputy director of an institute of the national cabinet's think-tank, the Development and Research Center of the State Council.

The real purpose of the U.S. war against Afghanistan, nominally against terrorism, "is to make the presence of its military force felt in Central Asia," according to the views of insightful analysts, the article states. "This has posed a real threat to the source and channels of China's strategic resources."

In addition, China's oil interests in such nations as Sudan are endangered. In the mid- and late-1990s, China carried out a policy of developing external oil resources. This included a "successful" investment "in some sensitive countries such as Sudan."

However, the article notes, the United States, "in the name of anti-terrorism, has made a public declaration that any state or government, which ever supported terrorist activities, will be on the list of being hit. Sudan is probably on the list. Voices grow stronger recently in the U.S., urging expansion of the sphere of its military strikes. This has created highly unstable factors in external areas important for China's resources."
