
Editorial

Countdown!

From the British assassination of President Kennedy, to the sabotage of the SDI, to the impeachment operation against President Clinton, the process of the British monarchy's intended manipulation of a thermonuclear confrontation between NATO and Russia has been building. Now the showdown is nigh. The world's leading forecaster Lyndon LaRouche estimates it could arrive by early March—and you would be an idiot not to heed his warning.

Americans don't like to think about such global matters, of course. Our citizens have shrunk terribly since Franklin Roosevelt's death, and are walking as if blindfolded to their doom.

To those who take off the blinders, the intent and nearness of a showdown are obvious.

For example, an editorial in the Feb. 2 Financial Times, voice of a significant section of London establishment, headlined "Ukraine faces moment of truth," not only declares that the elected government of Ukraine, now under siege, is "a spent force," but threatens Russia: "If Ukrainians push the man in Kiev out of power, Russians might wonder why they should not do the same to the man in the Kremlin."

Regime change with the world's second-largest thermonuclear power? What do you think that portends?

The Russians are also making it abundantly clear that they understand the nature of the challenge. Among the more direct statements were those made by Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov at last weekend's Munich Security Conference, in which he said:

"It is impossible to overlook the symbolism of the date of today's meeting. 70 years ago one of the most difficult, bloody, and crucial battles of World War II, the battle of Stalingrad, was over. Hundreds of thousands of my compatriots who gave their lives for this victory on the banks of Volga were not only defending the Motherland, but also fighting for the attainment of universal peace, just as all our allies were doing.

"The diplomacy efforts were also aimed at the purpose of not permitting the tragedy of world war to repeat. They resulted in the creation of the United Nations Organization. However, soon afterwards the Cold War drew the dividing lines in Europe, putting off the opportunities for building a system of collective security, which is embodied in the UN Charter, for a long time..."

Lavrov went on to point out the leading areas where this "NATO-bloc" thinking is still active against the Russians, most specifically, in Ukraine, Syria, and on so-called ballistic missile defense, which he identified as not being defensive at all, but rather a preparation for offensive measures against Russia.

A new phase of that BMD program was initiated this week, with the deployment of the Aegis destroyers to Spain, as NATO and the Obama Administration still refuse to give Russia assurances the system is not aimed at it.

The tragedy of a new world war is looming—with direct challenges to Russia's sovereignty. Recall Prime Minister Dmitri Medvedev's May 2102 remarks, that such a challenge could result in the use of "nuclear weapons." Yet the British monarchy and its assets continue that challenge—threatening global extinction.

There are options for peace. They start with removing British agent Obama, followed by smashing the system that controls him, with Glass-Steagall. Get your head out of the sand, and act now.