

British Crown Peddles Hitler-Style Genocide

by an EIR Investigative Team

Dec. 21—On Dec. 12, an EIR News Service wire, headlined, “British Admit: Copenhagen Is All About Genocide,” reported: “The official British policy for the Copenhagen conference is now out, in explicit language: genocide, on a scale that would make Adolf Hitler blush. The London School of Economics, the anchor of the Fabian Gordon Brown government, has produced a study for Copenhagen, released by the British organization Optimum Population Trust (OPT), calling for the reduction of world population by between 3-5 billion people between now and 2050. This flagrant call for mass extermination is based on the argument that the single greatest cause of global warming is overpopulation, and that the most ‘cost-effective’ cure for global warming is radical population reduction.

“According to a recent OPT study, the so-called global warming crisis can be solved most cheaply, by reducing the world population by 500 million between now and 2050. Since linear population projections put world population at well over 9 billion by that date, the proposal to cut back world population to just over 6 billion people, would mean the elimination of 3 billion people.

“Indeed, an OPT press release, dated March 16, 2009, titled ‘Earth Heading for 5 Billion Overpopulation?’ reported, ‘Based on ecological footprint and biological capacity data which have become available over the last decade, OPT estimates the world’s sustainable population currently at 5 billion and the U.K.’s at 18 million (the U.K.’s actual current population is 61 million).’

“The release continued, ‘however, these figures are predicated on present levels and patterns of consumption. Greener lifestyles in the U.K. could push up its sustainable population; by contrast, if the world as a whole grows richer and consumes more, this will reduce the planet’s carrying capacity. If present trends continue, by 2050, when the UN projects world population will be 9.1 billion, there will be an estimated 5 billion more people than the Earth can support.’

“A later OPT report, prepared for Copenhagen, called ‘Fewer Emitters, Lower Emissions, Less Cost,’ spelled out London’s solution: Place population reduction at the top of the agenda. OPT ‘called on climate change negotiators to ensure that population restraint policies are adopted by every state worldwide to combat climate change.’

“The UNFPA, the United Nations Population Fund, gave its de facto blessing to this mass murder scheme on Nov. 18, when they featured Optimum Population Trust’s director, Roger Martin, as a presenter of the UN’s own ‘State of World Population 2009’ report, a document geared to the now-ongoing Copenhagen conference on global warming. While the UN report, itself, makes the same link between global warming and population growth, it is the OPT study and its ‘Pop Offsets’ program of targeted population reduction in the world’s poorest countries, that defines the true London agenda at Copenhagen.”

Genocide Rejected at Copenhagen

The British Malthusian agenda was, fortunately, repudiated at Copenhagen. The only “accord” to come out of the two-week long (Dec. 7-18) extravaganza, was a dissenting text, based on a document drafted weeks before the conference, by China, India, South Africa, and Brazil, rejecting any system of binding caps on greenhouse gas and carbon emissions, and rejecting any international enforcement structures. That “BASIC” (Brazil, South Africa, India, China) document was signed by U.S. President Barack Obama, in a last-minute session after most heads of state had already left the conference site. Obama feared an enormous political backlash, if he came back from Copenhagen empty-handed, following his earlier Copenhagen Olympics gaffe, and the accelerating collapse of the U.S. economy, which had already substantially eroded public support for his Presidency.

The fact that the President, in his political desperation, sided with the developing-sector bloc, which repudiated the London-led drive for a world ecological dictatorship, was not lost on Obama’s British sponsors, who are in an all-out drive to obliterate his Presidency. Within hours of the collapse of the British Copenhagen agenda, the British press was full of blood-curdling attacks on Obama. Greenpeace, an arm of the British Royals’ Worldwide Fund for Nature (WWF) apparatus, denounced the President as “the man who killed Copenhagen.”

His Royal Virus Prince Philip wants to see the world's population reduced to no more than 2 billion; his World Wildlife Fund was created to see that it happens.

Lyndon LaRouche warned on Dec. 18, that President Obama needs to tighten his security, now that London has decided that he is no longer a viable tool of their drive to destroy the United States and establish an oligarchical post-Westphalian Malthusian fascist world order.

What Broke the Copenhagen Scheme

Sources close to the U.S. Presidency confirmed to EIR that what broke up London's Copenhagen scheme was the issue of genocide. According to one former senior U.S. official, who was deeply involved in the Copenhagen preparations, many developing-sector leaders actually bought into the climate change fraud, particularly those among British Commonwealth member-states. However, as the Summit approached, it became clear that the actual agenda had nothing to do with global warming at all. The conference was all about imposing Malthusian genocide, specifically targeting the developing world.

Indeed, the epicenter of this global Malthusian drive to wipe out billions of people over the next several generations, is the British Crown. The central role of the British monarchy, in the months leading up to Copenhagen, in publicly promoting genocide, was a strategic miscalculation, which blew up in their faces.

For decades, this news service has regularly exposed the role of the British Crown in peddling schemes to eliminate upwards of 80% of the world's population. From the very outset, the global conservation/ecology movement was a post-World War II fraud, aimed at reviving eugenics and euthanasia, in the aftermath of the defeat of Hitler, and the discrediting of those British-authored mass-murder policies. Every founder of the post-war conservation/ecology movement was a British Crown retainer, from Sir Julian Huxley, to Sir Peter Scott, to Max Nicholson. And they all knew that "ecology" was the postmodern parlance for mass euthanasia.

The British Royal Consort, Prince Philip, along with wartime Nazi Allgemeine SS officer Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, founded the World Wildlife Fund in 1961, and soon afterwards, launched the 1001 Trust—A Nature Conservancy—to finance a worldwide radical environmental movement, which would emerge out of the cultural paradigm shift to a counter-culture, following the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Prince Philip has boasted that he hopes to be incarnated as a deadly virus—so he can contribute to radical population reduction. He has stated that he wishes to see the world population reduced to below 2 billion people—to preserve his royal lifestyle.

Prince Charles, the Prince of Wales, is an equally fanatical ecologist/Malthusian. The apparatus centered in the British royal household surfaced in the run-up to Copenhagen, as the biggest promoters of mass genocide, under the guise of "solving global warming." They stand exposed as criminals against humanity.

The Apparatus

Many world leaders—who had previously bought into the idea that the British monarchy today is a powerless relic of imperial glory long since passed—were visibly shocked at the events in Trinidad and Tobago from Nov. 27-29, 2009, when Queen Elizabeth II used the occasion of the annual British Commonwealth

Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM), to declare that the British Empire was back, that “the Commonwealth” would take leadership to push through a binding global climate change regime in Copenhagen. The Queen flaunted the fact that the 54 Commonwealth nations constituted one-third of the world’s population, and an even larger portion of the planet’s landmass. French President Nicolas Sarkozy was touted as the guest of honor at the CHOGM, indicating that a new “Entente Cordiale” was in the offing at Copenhagen.

The Queen’s pronouncements at Trinidad were no idle threats. Behind the Empire’s drive for a new global Malthusian post-nation-state system, is an apparatus of radical ecology groups and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), bankrolled by the Crown and by the most powerful corporate interests in the trans-Atlantic region.

The organizations, combined, form an interlocking directorate of anti-science, radical depopulation groupings—all, ultimately run by the British Crown, through Prince Philip’s WWF.

Among the most prominent of these groups at Copenhagen were: the Optimum Population Trust, mentioned above; Prince Charles’ Rainforest Network; and the Global Footprint Network, the Malthusian umbrella organization which prominently includes OPT.

The Global Footprint Network was founded in 2003, to present quack “proof” that the world is overpopulated, that world carrying capacity is shrinking, and that billions of people—living and not yet born—are going to have to be eliminated to save mankind from certain extinction.

On Nov. 24, just days before the start of the Copenhagen Summit, the GFN issued a report, claiming “humanity now requires the resources it would take almost one and a half planets to sustainably produce.... Data show that humanity is demanding nature’s resources and producing carbon dioxide emissions at a rate 44 percent faster than what nature can regenerate and reabsorb. This ecological overshoot means it now takes about 17 months for the Earth to regenerate what we use in one year.”

The Network’s “ecological footprint” data, which is used by the UN and by the WWF, along with 126 governments, leaves out the most essential character of humanity: man’s capacity to make scientific and technological discoveries that redefine resources, and allow for expanding potential relative population density. Human progress, to the point of sustaining a global population of over 6.8 billion people, disproves and discredits the very essence of the Global Footprint Network’s argument.

Indeed, the GFN boasts that their entire program is based on the thoroughly discredited radical Malthusian report of the Club of Rome, Limits to Growth, produced in the early 1970s by MIT fraudsters Jay Forrester and Dennis Meadows. In the run-up to Copenhagen, Meadows resurfaced with a 30-years-later reprise of his original study, demanding radical population reduction on an even more murderous scale than he promoted in the ’70s.

OPT, which was prominently deployed at Copenhagen, is a direct arm of the British Crown, with such “former” top Foreign and Commonwealth Office mandarins as Sir Crispin Tickell, former British Ambassador to the United Nations Security Council; Jonathon Porritt, Commander of the British Empire, longtime head of the British Friends of the Earth (FOE) and the top environmentalist in the Tony Blair government as chairman of the UK Sustainable Development Commission; and Sir David Attenborough, trustee of the British Museum and Royal Botanical Gardens.

The direct hand of the British Royal Family was also prominent at Copenhagen, through Prince Charles' Rainforest Project, which was launched in October 2007, explicitly to promote radical population reduction as the solution to global warming. The Project promotes the idea that rainforests must be cut off from human activity, particularly from agriculture, forestry, and mining, because any economic development contributes to global warming. The original idea of a tax on advanced sector countries, which would go into a fund to buy off developing nations, to convince them seal off their rainforests from human access, was presented by Prince Charles at the kickoff meeting of his Rainforest Project on Oct. 25, 2007—at a dinner sponsored by the WWF and hosted by his father, Prince Philip.

On March 31, 2009, Charles hosted a meeting of the Rainforest Project at his St. James Palace, to set the agenda for Copenhagen. Among the attendees: French President Sarkozy, Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, Australian Prime Minister Kevin Rudd, World Bank president Robert Zoellick, Lloyds Bank chairman Lord Peter Levene of Portsoken, four British government ministers, including Foreign Secretary David Miliband and Energy Minister Edward Miliband (and a partridge in a pear tree).

The top-down genocide agenda of the Rainforest Project is further underscored by the fact that the organization is directed and bankrolled by the biggest raw material and financial cartels on the planet, starting with Rio Tinto Plc, the giant British precious metals cartel that is part of the Queen's personal financial portfolio. Rio Tinto's CEO, Tom Albanese, is a member of the 27-person steering committee of the Rainforest Project. Other corporate sponsors include Barclays Bank, Royal Dutch Shell, Morgan Stanley, Deutsche Bank, and DLA Piper.
