

Brits push eco-fascist crusade vs. Clinton

by Jeffrey Steinberg

In the Oct. 25-26 London Financial Times, staff writer and rabid environmentalist Joe Rogaly penned a vicious attack against the Clinton administration, for the President's refusal to dismantle the U.S. economy, by caving in to eco-fascist hoaxes, like global warming. Although the President, in his Oct. 22 speech at the National Geographic Society announcing his policy for the December climate summit in Kyoto, Japan, unfortunately gave credence to the hoax, he nevertheless refused to adopt the draconian greenhouse gas emissions standards being peddled by the Blair government in Britain, and by the rest of the European Union (EU). As a result of the President's refusal to read from a British script, the anti-Clinton venom came bubbling to the surface once again, from Buckingham Palace to 10 Downing Street.

"It is a pity," Rogaly sneered, "that the U.S. is not a member of the Commonwealth. If it were, the 54-nation association . . . could suspend or even expel it. That would teach Washington a lesson. It might then take serious action to curb emissions of greenhouse gases."

From the day that the Blair government was installed by the Privy Council at 10 Downing, it has been mobilized to bully the United States into accepting emissions cutbacks that would decimate what is left of the U.S. industrial base.

At the June 1997 Group of Eight summit in Denver, Colorado, Blair, French President Jacques Chirac, and even a so-called U.S. ally, German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, all ganged up against President Clinton for his refusal to bow to Blair's greenhouse gas emissions proposals.

In a speech at the United Nations on June 23, Blair attacked Clinton, charging: "At Kyoto, industrialized countries must agree to legally binding targets for significant reductions in greenhouse gas emissions during the first decade of the next century. The biggest responsibility falls on those countries with the biggest emissions," Blair said, in a blunt reference to the United States. "We in Europe have now put our cards on the table. It is time for the special pleading to stop, and for others to follow suit."

Blair spelled out his position, since adopted by the EU. The EU, he said, is committed to "reducing greenhouse gas emissions in developed countries to 15% below their 1990 level by the year 2010. In Britain, we will be ready to go further, to a 20% target." Blair praised his predecessor, Margaret Thatcher, for peddling the global warming fraud: "I attacked the last British government for many things, but they did deliver on the greenhouse gas emissions targets set at Rio. Some other countries cannot say the same, including some of the industrialized nations. I say that our targets will not be taken seriously by the poorer countries until we, the richer countries, are meeting them."

On the same day that Blair delivered his remarks, which the London Guardian described as a "thinly disguised attack on America," Blair's attack dog, Foreign Secretary Robin Cook, also lambasted Clinton and the United States, in an address to the world government body. "At the moment," Cook was quoted by the Daily Telegraph, "the biggest single problem is that the American public has not yet grasped, that if it continues with its present lifestyle, then it is going to make it impossible for its children or grandchildren to enjoy the kind of environment, and therefore the kind of lifestyle that the Americans have today."

That deadly virus, Prince Philip

Blair and Cook are singing a royal tune, written by the royal consort and chief operations officer of the Club of the Isles, Prince Philip. It was Philip and his "ex" Nazi cohort, Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, who launched the World Wildlife Fund (WWF) in the early 1960s, to spread the genocidal pagan dogma of "environmentalism," i.e., the polite version of eugenics and radical Malthusianism. Philip is notorious for his 1988 boast to a German journalist, that, "In the event that I am reincarnated, I would like to return as a deadly virus, in order to contribute something to solve overpopulation."

Prince Philip despises the United States. On May 18, 1990, while in Washington to attend a conference on religion and ecology, co-sponsored by the WWF and the North American Congress on Religion and Ecology, he called for the break-up of the United States into scores of "bio-regions," to be led by local pagan religious sects, which he finds to be far more "realistic" than the revealed religions—i.e., Christianity.

And, at a Washington, D.C. press conference on Oct. 29—right after the Clinton global warming announcement—Prince Philip's WWF released its detailed blueprint for the break-up of the United States. The 680-page report, "North America Conservation Assessment," according to its accompanying press release, calls for the division of the United States and Canada into 116 semi-autonomous eco-regions, crossing state and national borders. WWF is pouring $10 million into the effort.

Prince Philip's WWF minions, in dozens of well-heeled U.S.-based radical ecology sects, have joined the Blair-Cook chorus, targetting the United States, to create the appearance of "domestic" opposition to the President's position. Given the ferocity of the House of Windsor-led attacks, the President would do well to speak the truth: There is no global warming, so people attending the Kyoto conference ought to have a nice sushi dinner, and go home.
